Hands Deserve Special Care

Virginia Bruce

Her pretty hands are the result of constant care and proper exercise.

By HELEN FOLLETT

IF FINGERS are long and tapering, the skin texture of the hand a lovely, creamy color, knuckles perfectly padded, nails oval and of rosy pinkness, a girl has got a good start along the beauty trail. Pretty hands, like lovely coiffures and clear, healthy complexions, are pretty much taken for granted these days.

Not much can be done to change the shape of the hand although a massage will slenderize stubby finger tips to a certain extent. But keeping the skin surface of good texture is no trick at all. Avoid hot and cold water and harsh soaps, apply one of those milky, semi-liquid hand lotions twice a day and there you are! The hands respond quickly to good care.

Awkward movements are a beauty handicap. Self-conscious girls don't realize how much they talk with their hands. They want to sit on them and hide them. They cut some exercise that make the muscles of the wrist more flexible. Lift the hand and wave it to-by. Watch how you do it. Pose the fingers prettily. Make a bracelet of one hand and send it round and round the wrist to loosen up the position. Place palms together, slide from one over the other, up and down.

The busy housewife who must rout out dust every day will do well to keep a cut lemon handy in the kitchen. After using soap and water, she should plunge her finger tips into the lemon pulp. The acid will clean the nail caves quickly and there will be no need of using a nail brush at night. Lanoline applied to the hands will disappear quickly and give smoothness to a surface that is roughened by the many details of the housekeeping chores.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"It's In The Air"

Jack Benny and Una Merkel Team Up In Fun Film

Una Merkel's entire "reel" life changed when she was assigned her latest screen role in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new drama, "It's in the Air" now playing at the Capitol Theatre.

She forms a new film team with Jack Benny and has a chance, for the first time, to show her ability as a dramatic actress in the production.

Miss Merkel's characterization is quite a new type. She plays the role of a tennis professional who marries Benny and later leaves him.

The radio comedian, who recently finished his starring role in "Broadway Melody of 1936," portrays a Broadway "chiseler" who possesses a million and one rackets. In spite of his shady dealings, luck makes him a national hero.

Charles F. Reisner, who directed Benny's advent in the screen world, held the same position in the filming of the comedy-drama, taken from an original story by Byron Morgan and Lew Lipton. They also wrote the screen play. Herman J. Mankiewicz and Harry W. Conn wrote additional dialogue.

Also Thelma Todd in "Slightly Static" and a novelty short, "Sunday Sports in Mexico" make up an entertaining program.

George Arliss in "Mr. Hobo"

Coming to the Capitol Thursday for three days, will be seen that grand gentleman GEORGE ARLISS in an entirely new role. The first gentleman of the screen discards the swagger of historical roles to portray a ragged hobo of the open road. "Don't forget, make a date for next Thursday."

AT THE REGENT

"Coronado"

Judging from her performance in her first picture, Paramount's tuneful "Coronado" at the Bella now playing, Wednesday, matinee daily, you are going to hear a great deal about a young lady named Betty Burgess in the future.

Miss Burgess has the feminine lead in the romance in which youth has its fling in 1936's first joyous musical. "Coronado" and she has got what it takes. She is an 18-year old high school girl who can act as well as sing and dance, and the ever-increasing popularity of Maurice Chevalier says no doubt will lead her to top-ranking stardom.

"Coronado" is one of the best of 1936's musicals, mainly because of the presence of Eddy Duchin and his popular orchestra, though the singing of both Mrs. Burgess and Johnny Downes is all that could be asked.

The story is the one of the rich boy and the poor girl in love, with refreshing variations. It is laid against a background of the popular Hotel Coronada in Southern California. Miss Burgess is cast as an entertainer with Duchin's band in the hotel, while Downes is the carefree son of a wealthy motor manufacturer, possessed of a talent for writing songs.

There is a plentitude of comedy in the film, furnished mainly by Jack Haley, Andy Devine, Alice White and Leon Errol. Haley and Devine are two sailors returning from the Philippines with a pet parrot.... are very voluble parrot, at that.

...ng exceptionally hilarious in their roles and the rubber-legged Errol hands in one of the best performances of his screen career.

The picture directed by Norman McLeod, has superb settings and the dance ensembles, performed by some of the loveliest girls in Hollywood, are staged with a maximum of cleverness.

Top Stars of Romance

With the filming of George Du Maurier's immortal love matter-drama "Peter Ibbetson," the feature attraction on the same program, Paramount has only two produced in a decade achievement, but Gary Cooper, unquestionably the star of the piece in name as well as fact, accomplished something in the nature of a personal triumph in his noteworthy characterization of the title role.

Cooper reveals himself possessed of talents that, until now, have had no chance or particular medium of expression. Just as in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and "Desire," Cooper's star was given an opportunity for an unforgettable portrayal, so again he measures up to the high standards and high prestige built up in the stage and operatic version of "Peter Ibbetson". In his newest portrayal, Cooper surpasses anything he has yet done on the screen, bringing surprising, mingled sincerity and a tender honesty to the role of Du Maurier's famous character. Cooper not only walks away with the acting honors in his memorable photoplay, but stamps himself as an actor of top rank in the film firmament. Ann Harding also covers herself with glory in a difficult role. Metrotone News with its gist of up to the minute important events described by Edwin C. Hill concludes the program.

PRESENTATION

On Thursday evening January 9th a supper was held in the United Church hall followed by the Annual Congregational Meeting at which the reports were read by all the departments of church work. After all had partaken of the delicious supper, the reports were listened to with much interest. Mrs. W. H. Dion treasurer of the W. M. S. reported a very successful year's work and called on the president, Mrs. (Dr.) Clark to come forward, Mrs. Dion, on behalf of the W. M. S. spoke words of sincere appreciation of the faithful and efficient work during the eight years Mrs. Clark served as president. Mrs. Harry Murphy then read an address and Mrs. Frank Dolaitor presented Mrs. Clark with a morocco leather purse and a beautiful embroidered cut work lace trimmed tablecloth as a token of esteem. Although taken by surprise Mrs. Clark very graciously thanked the ladies for their kindness in the past spoke of the splendid spirit of co-operation that is shown by all the W. M. S. members in the work of that society.

The address follows:—

Dear Mrs. Clark,—

The presence of the members of the W. M. S. of Shannonville here tonight to pay tribute to you is proof sufficient of the high place you occupy in our affections. Your eight years as president have been years of service for those who have been favored to be associated with you in the blessed work of furthering His Kingdom here on earth.

We have learned from you that to make success of things as you have done, you must possess a likeable disposition and a self assertive character, that blended nicely with all its worries and responsibilities, constitutes a splendid mixture of women of the type of yourself. We know your devotion to your duty. We had not long been associated with you before we found out where the true worker was found who gives her best and capably fills the office to which you were called. Your interest in the welfare and growth of the society shows well for the success that has been attained from year to year. Moore says, "Where there is room in the heart there is room in the house" and so it has been with you. The parsonage has always been open to you, and a welcome extended to us. A small token of our deep appreciation to you for kindnesses and untiring efforts toward us we desire to present you with this purse and best wishes for your future in which we hope to see a continuance of our president for the coming year. Our earnest prayers go out to you that the God who has guided you thus far will still be your Guide and that you may be many times repulsed during this New Year under your leadership.

A friend like you makes the eyes beam bright.

A friend like you makes friendships true.

A friend like you makes life worthwhile.

With you kindly way and gentle smile.

We feel that we are rich indeed In Because of a friend like you.

Signed on behalf of the members of the Shannonville W. M. S.

Mrs. Frank Dolaitor, Mrs. Sam Elliott, Mrs. Harry Murphy.

TORONTO MINES
Toronto, Jan.-14.—(CP)—A general flurry of interest appeared on the Toronto Mining Market with most of the price adjustments appearing in the gold group. Very few changes in cents were boarded for McKenzie, and Mayfair, the latter being registered for. Buffalo, Ankerite, Hoyemor, Beattie, Sisco and Conlarum.

The few narrow gains in the Base Metals, recorded in the previous session, were dropped and trade in the group ceased altogether. Dealings in the Silvers recorded minor advances for Cards and Eldorado but the latter had a net loss by early afternoon.

TORONTO STOCKS
Toronto, Jan. 14.—(CP)—A splurge of trading in the oils through the medium of substantial lapses of 1c in early afternoon on Toronto Industrial exchange, but part of these losses were dropped but in the last hour as the market firmed. Value of 1-to-1 transactions was headed by Imperial, nickel and oils.

British Columbia, off showed a loss of 1-4 this afternoon at 21 1-4, Imperial, Vulcan, Home and International Oil held the big end of their trading gaining the larger group remaining firm in a fairly slow trading and Nickel was unchanged at 34.

Trading expanded in the food, textile and paper industrial group with prices steady to strong. Dominion Textile touched a new low for the year at 21 1-2.

GRAIN
Winnipeg, Jan. 14.—(CP)—Practional recessions were registered in early trading on Winnipeg Grain Exchange today as scattered selling proved too weighty for limited support in evidence.

Wheat prices near mid-session were 1-4 to 1-4 cent lower, May at 97 5-8, July 98 and October 98 5-8 cents.

Farm Purchasing Power and Mines' Contributing Factors In Improvement in Year 1935

PROGRESS DESPITE ECONOMIC TROUBLES

Broader And More Equitable Basis of Taxation Must be Sought to Bring About Permanent Improvement

Toronto, January 14.—Opening his address at the annual meeting of The Canadian Bank of Commerce today, Sir John Aird, the bank's President, said that we could feel assured of an ending of international tension in Europe and the Far East and of the firm establishment of political and economic forces throughout the greater part of the world. We should be justified in regarding existing signs of business improvement as the most encouraging since 1928. As it was, entering the fourth year of the business revival, we now have a fair prospect of a broader and more regular advance than has been enjoyed for some time.

Last year, the very preceding one of the revival period, was remarkable not so much for the quickened pace of business, but for the fact that any progress was possible against politico-economic disturbances, both at home and abroad. The first half of 1935 was characterized by an irregularity in Canadian business, although there was a slight upward trend. From July, however, there was a forward surge, participated in by most of the industries that had remained severely depressed in the preceding years. From the point of view of employment conditions alone the better speed-up during the last quarter of the hastening events of the year, for it was mainly in this field that the most control existed. The last autumn, a season in which a downturn in business work and it is highly encouraging to find that it did not occur in 1935 and this year.

Farm Purchasing Power

Of equal importance was the improvement in farm purchasing power during 1935 which was the most widespread in the past six years, notwithstanding the disappointing results ever known in numerous sections of the West, although fortunately the yield was not quite considerably smaller than in 1934. There is still room for further betterment in farm purchasing power, however, and we look for the prospect of seeing it the this year to a much more satisfactory level.

Under market conditions which are inconceivably unfavourable, our lumber and pulp and paper mills during the past twelve-month increased their production, in the case of the former by 40 per cent over 1934 to the highest point since 1929, and in respect of newsprint, by 6 per cent to a record level.

Sir John drew attention to a remarkable transformation in Canadian production and trade during 1935. "Although," he said, "we have lost (though, I think, not beyond our powers of reinstation) part of our overseas markets for agricultural products, we have not only our cultivated land area to any appreciable extent, but we have diverted more of it to mixed farming, which has called for an improved quality of livestock and dairy products.

Mining's Large Contribution

"It seems quite impossible to overestimate the contribution which the mining industry as a whole has made to the improvement in 1935 and in former years, not as a result of artificial stimulation, but solely because of hard work and great technical skill in an industry under pressure, since it is one activity which is subject to no tariff backward. It has attracted thousands of investigators and has grown during the past few years has been the bright spot in the employment situation. Last year the number recorded output valued at 308 million dollars, which represents only a small fraction of the purchasing power created, despite heavy taxation, is disseminated throughout the entire Dominion; and it furnished more than a third of the foreign capital by Canadian railways. If our other industries had attained this record should have no railway problem."

Mining and forestry had the largest proportion in the taking our export trade as a whole to the high-ratio since 1930, and in a quantitative sense to over 70 per cent of normal. Apart from the splendid production record of the mining industry, it was highly important to note that with a remarkable transformation in the metallurgical and chemical industries, there is a sufficiency much of its larger exports flowed in the form of fabricated metals to the twenty countries which took significant quantities in 1935, as compared with the crude materials which thirteen corresponding countries took in 1926. Both of the lumber and newsprint industries also had more extensive markets for last year than ever before, with impressive volume to thirty-five countries, as against with twenty-six in 1929, while nearly 90 per cent of our newsprint was exported overseas, with about 75 per cent six years ago. Moreover, there had been a marked expansion in the trade with some of these countries, in Sweden, for example, and Australia. We have, therefore, a higher quality in some of our major exported products and are no longer dependent upon one or two markets for bulk of them, and consequently are less subject to price dictation, such as that in the case of newsprint. In this diversification of markets and of manufacturing in trade there is the foundation of a better economic life."

Industrial Unrestrained

Following a brief review of conditions prevailing in Canada, which were mainly favourable, Sir John said: "The present era is in striking contrast to that of the post-war times. Then, it was the widespread belief in governmental control that would promote a sound economy by ensuring the security of human life and property and by non-interference with private enterprise. A comparatively peaceful era of progress was accompanied by a rising standard of living, which was largely due to the introduction of power machinery, but also because a smooth-working exchanges system had been built up through which trade was based upon relatively stable exchange rates. Price levels in the major countries were kept relatively related and capital for productive purposes flowed freely across frontiers.

"In present circumstances it is reminded you that the economic dislocations of the World War and its aftermath were primarily responsible for the onset of the depression of the early 1930's, the disorganization in domestic and international trade which was its legacy, and the courageous action on the part of governments, no less than of individuals. You are aware that the various expedients, under government auspices, which have been adopted or taken as protective measures, ranging from a vast array of trade restrictions to foreign exchange control, monopolistic destruction, monetary manipulation and subsidies to primary and non-productive public works. As a result there is a rigidity in the economic system which might easily bring about a permanent abnormal restriction of living throughout the world. The first step from this danger is to see that agitural forces should now be allowed free play if the world is to escape the inevitable economic flexibility. So Governments might well consider the wisdom of restricting intervention the sphere of commerce and finance and confining their energies to promoting and to generate new productive and trading activities and to removing hindrances to the well of all classes of their communities."

Confidence Returning

Considering all the eventful circumstances of the past six years, the fulfillment of their credit obligations was remarkable and is a splendid foundation for reward in the future flow to Canada of capital seeking safe and profitable investment. Canada is still in the early stage of her political development and of her economic development capital is indispensable. Only the most conservative use of our credit will ensure the continued availability of that capital in the future. It is a must learn to use our credit more wisely and to use it more sparingly. The addition of a million of suitable settlers of good record to our population would give her the larger population necessary to support the most economical railway and transportation system and would also go far to solve our unemployment problem. Many more people in natural resources, have more people and more industries. After the Great War, with less proportionate wealth and productive facilities than today, Canada was well be asked, whether the vast amounts expended by the United States in relief assistance of the unemployed—in one way by military and naval expenditures, and in other humanely spent in establishing the excess population in productive settlement bells still available, namely, Canada, Australia, Africa, Argentina and Eastern Siberia.

No one now realized more clearly than our statisticians that the control of public services is out of proportion to the population and its income. The situation cannot be relieved by increased borrowing or by shifting part of the burden of the care of unemployed people from one legislative group, to another.

It was now quite generally agreed that unbalanced budgets, with large deficits and to maintain social services on the present scale cannot go on indefinitely and therefore that the need for rapid economic recovery and higher taxation must be accepted. This study should be directed to the problem of establishing a broader and more equitable basis of taxation which will be capable of being advocated as more likely than any other new form of levy to meet the need of a balanced Dominion budget.

Essentials to Improvement

With the factor of confidence all things must be accounted for, declared Sir John. But as long as there was uncertainty or distrust in the minds that governments as world peace, stabilization of currencies, industrial relations, the attitude of Governments towards private business and good faith as to public contractual obligations, permanent improvement in world affairs was impossible.

Mr. S. H. Logan, General Manager, stated in his address that while Canadian banks have already made substantial concessions in the lending rates, they are under constant pressure to cut these rates still further, that loan funds of the bank borrowers must of necessity be governed by the rates to the banks of the money which they lend. He then went on to show that operating and interest charges of the institutions were approximately 4 per cent of the money loaned, whereas borrowers banks are not in a position to lend to borrowers the full amount of the deposits, but must for not only cash reserves but also secondary reserves in the form of liquid securities must be maintained for the protection of depositors. Since no interest is derived from cash reserves and the average yield on secondary reserves under present conditions falls below the cost of money to the bank it is obvious that loan rates must exceed that cost.

The banker has at all times a long investment—that of increased income—to keep his resources liquid. The depositor and his loans as the highest point commensurate with safety to the depositor. That inducement is at present doubly powerful for the bank's proportion of his funds in liquid investments is chiefly Government obligations which, under present conditions, are the most attractive the average return on such investments is higher than it has been at any time within a generation. Power to create bank-money was based on the fact that bank deposits are money but if he receives more than he can deposit in immediate needs he can defer its use. To be a store of value money must be preferred, another important function of money.

Apart from legal tender, money now issued mainly by the Bank of England, the Dominion of Canada, consists mainly of the obligations of the commercial banks which are represented by the amount of their notes in circulation and of the deposits standing to their books. The creation of this money was a tribute to the confidence in the creation of wealth. The bank-money received by a borrower when granted a loan is the right to claim wealth by one penny for it is fully offset by the liability to repay that loan when it does, however, enable him to carry on his business and thus contribute to the creation of new wealth by his enterprise and economy. Bank-money was thus an exchange of the borrower's credit, effectively backed by what is known, for the credit of the bank in the form of bank-money, which is known and accepted everywhere.

Development of System

The present banking system had been built up gradually on the experience of successive generations, adjusted from time to time to meet changing circumstances and to avoid errors it had made. The result that has grown a great advance. The dislocations resulting from the Great War, the post-war European frontiers and trade restrictions had created a new system under which it was never designed to meet but it is gradually adapting itself to the new system of operation. Sir John said: "Banking before we discuss the banking system which has served in the past it would be well to be sure that we know what it is shadow and losing the substance.

Board Room Gossip

Montreal Power was an active and strong feature yesterday. It is learned that the company intends to issue $10,000,000 of new bonds, $10,000,000 to bear 3 1-2 per cent interest and $5,000,000 3 1-2 per cent. Interest. The purpose of new issue is for refunding presently outstanding bonds. A considerable saving will thus be effected in interest payments, as the outstanding bonds presently bear five per cent. This, in time, should be reflected in larger per share earnings on the common.

Montreal Power is only following the trend of other Canadian and American corporations. A corporation in as good a financial position as "Power", with its excellent past earnings records, is entitled to participate in the generally lower interest rates prevailing throughout the country. There is no doubt but that the new bonds will be readily taken up by investors.

The report of Canada Vinegars for the year ending November 30th, 1935, was somewhat disappointing. The company earned only $1.32 a share, as against dividend requirements of $1.60. Last year's earnings were the lowest in a number of years. In fact, the company covered the annual dividend only fully in every year of the depression.

Good buying has been noted in Canadian Industrial Alcohol the past week, Shareholders are anxiously awaiting the annual statement which should show the big increase in the next few days. The report, it is believed, will make concrete reading. The President's remarks with the annual statement should also be interesting reading.

World Cannot Keep Pace With Gold Output

From data available in the first 11 months, it appears that world gold production for 1935 amounted to 30,000,000 ounces, the largest in history. This would amount to somewhat more than one billion dollars.

With imports of gold into the United States in 1935 at more than $1.4 billion, in obvious excess of record production cannot keep up. The United States is forcing the stumpling place for gold, used for the following purposes: (1) to pay for goods; (2) to pay interest on principal on debts; (3) to buy American securities. The latter has been the major objective, by far.

The result is that the United States is lending its industries, or at least the equity in its industries, for a large part of the industrial function of which just now seems to be in the making.

International Petroleum

The failure of "Pete" to respond with the general buoyancy of most of the oils has caused a great deal of discussion. In similar circumstances in other oils of late it has usually followed the leadership of the parent company, Standard Oil of New Jersey. Recently, however, when the majority of interest in stocks are making new high levels on the New York and Canadian Stock Exchanges, the shares of the International Petroleum held back and had not followed the rest in liquidation. Financial Service has been enquiring into this connection with the result that we are able to advise our readers that this selling was of an unintelligent and in a short space c. time it should spend itself. The activities of the company will expand again this year and the company is in a strong position to doubt its ability to continue paying $2.50 a share. It will be better informed shareholders for some little time to come. The Standard Oil concerns do not make it a practice to commence paying a dividend that they, themselves see their way clear to carry on many years ahead.

Noranda

Noranda is lined with rumors that a close understanding has been reached between heavy producers of copper in Africa and at Noranda.

Quebec Mines Give Good Display of Strength

A feature of recent sessions of the Toronto Stock Exchange has been the consistent strength in Quebec mines under the leadership of Sisco, Bidgood, Perron Gold and several others, including Chibougamau. Many important mining men are of the opinion that 1936 will be Quebec's year in the gold mining industry. Last year there were many important finds in the province of Quebec while producers have paid nearly all cases, added tremendously to their known ore reserves. It is thought that 1936 will be a large number of new mines will be made ready for production with which to operate.

FAMOUS LINE OF COOKS - BOUCHER IS BROKEN UP

First Time They Have Been Parted Since 1926

DAY WILL PLAY

Back After a Long Layoff From Back Injury

Although of necessity Lester Patrick will change his famous Cook-Boucher-Cook line, and Coach Dick Irvin of Toronto Maple Leafs will probably break up his pet Conacher-Primeau-Jackson combination tonight.

But the Leaf change is not being made, like the New York Rangers' move, because any in the high-scoring trio is slowing up. Joe Primeau is suffering from a throat ailment and Wild Mots will centre Gordie Jackson and Charlie Conacher flanking Bruins in Boston.

The more permanent changes in the Ranger set-up come under scrutiny for the first time in Montreal tonight when Patrick's team clash with Maroons, Stanley Cup holders and present leaders of the National Hockey League's Canadian division.

Montreal fans will be first to judge the wisdom of, Patrick's move in breaking up the partnership that has brought Bun and Bill Cook and Frank Boucher an all-time scoring record of more than 1,100 points since they came out of the west in 1926 to join the N.H.L.

Patrick hopes the reorganization will forestall an imminent tumble into the American division cellar, now occupied by Bruins who are only a game behind the Patrickmen. Whether it will may be judged by the way the new combinations act against the hard-hitting Marcons.

Canadiens In Tough Spot.

Continuing a tough schedule that will see them play light games in the next two weeks, Canadiens move into New York tonight for the first of a two-contest series with Americans, the second to be fought in Montreal Thursday. With the teams only a point apart, the games loom as important to both.

Americans have prepared for the series by sending to Rochester for Tony Hemmerling, a right winger, who will help fill the gap left by injuries to Hal Godden and Tony Anderson. Red Dutton is also sending Joel Klein to replace Hemmerling and giving Bill Brydge, veteran defenceman, a rest. He thinks Brydge is overtrained.

Leafs will be bolstered for their series on Broadway by the return of Happy Day after a game layoff occasioned by a bad kidney. Irvin hopes he will strengthen the rearguard which looked very weak against Canadiens Saturday night when Day was absent. Bill Hollett, who replaced Day, is being returned to Syracuse.

Leafs have two chances to take over the division lead from Maroons again. If the battling tonight does not leave them on top they can go there Thursday by defeating Rangers in New York. Maroons will be idle then.

TIM HURST CROSSES UP THE BATTER

Many stories are told about Tim Hurst, colorful umpire. Here's one: One day Jim Delehanty of the Washington club was at bat. Cheebow and Kleinow made up the New York battery. The count on Jim was two balls and two strikes. Tim called the next one a ball. Kleinow protested. "Since we seem to disagree," said Tim, "we better get Delehanty's opinion. Where was it Jim?"

"A perfect strike, right through the heart of the plate, wasn't high," Delehanty said, boxing to stir up Tim.

"So it was a perfect strike, huh," retorted Hurst. "Well, in that case, you are really out now and I suggest you strike at the next ball, no matter where it is."

Catcher Kleinow knowing Hurst's word was as good as gold, signalled for a high ball, and Cheebo loosed one high and on the outside, far beyond Delehanty's reach.

"Strike three, I down," was Hurst's matter where that one was, Jimmy" boomed Hurst's voice as the scowling Delehanty hurried his bat to the bench.

By EDWARD B. FOSTER

Providence, R.I., Jan. 14 (AP) — Two men, James J. Braddock and Joe Louis, have caused tremendous, hy increased interest in professional boxing and led thousands of men and women to talk about the game though perhaps they've never seen a boxing glove.

Although Louis' sensational exploits during 1935 must be reckoned the outstanding development of the year, Braddock's stunning defeat of Max Baer for the heavyweight championship can be ranked a close second among the causes for boxing's revival. This entirely unexpected result was of tremendous value to the game for it showed at once a man with a strong physique and good heart, well grounded in the fundamentals of boxing, always has a chance.

If, as seems likely now, Louis and Braddock are matched for the title this year, the "gate" should run well over $1,000,000 and bring such a rush of customers as no stadium in the country could accommodate.

Many New Champs.

Practically every division produced new champions during the past year and it seems as though the turnover will continue without interruption during 1936.

John Henry Lewis, negro from the far west, decisively defeated Bob Olin for the light heavyweight championship but there will be each hold it in the face of such challengers as Jock McAvoy, Al McCoy and Tony Shucco is doubtful. The present middleweight champion, Babe Risko, is being pushed very hard by Freddie Steele and Lou Brouillard, a former title-holder, and Tony Canzoneri may be hard pressed to hold the lightweight crown against Lou Ambers or Wesley Ramey. Barney Ross, however, seems to stand alone among the welterweights.

Praise should be given to Freddie Miller, featherweight champion, who defends his title not only in Europe but in this country against all comers. Why a few misguided commissions should take it upon themselves to endeavor to relieve Miller of the title he won so justly and fairly is beyond conception.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Continued mild weather resulted in the Arena being closed over the week end and again yesterday. With the possibilities calling for a drop in temperature, however, most likely to the senior interscholastic group will be the chances of prying off the hockey lid in Belleville in 1936, when all four local senior schools will appear on Wednesday night. Manager Geo. Gay stated today he had obtained a good foundation throughout the mild spell and was ready to open the Arena doors as soon as a flood could be used successfully and it freezes solidly. Naturally the record mild spell put the damper on the opening of the Ont. League last night, but that going loop will swing into operation Wednesday night with interschoolastic games on Wednesday evening.

"Yes sir, Peterboro' will be here Friday night, rain, snow or freeze. You see, we muffed our opening game date, but with the weather turning colder we expect to pack 'em in Friday night, especially after the splendid showing our club made in Peterboro last Friday," stated Skipper Eddie Thomas this morning. Under the new O.H.A. agreement the Belleville "Redmen" agreed to play a double schedule with the Oshawa "Chevies" and the Peterboro' squad, so naturally this gives the fans an opportunity to witness the two Ont. League clubs the locals, on two occasions. Following Friday night's game here the locals will have a full week of rest before the Oshawa squad more into our midst on the 24th of the month. In the meantime, however, the local Junior "Reds" are slated to journey to Kingston on Thursday night, when they clash with the Queen's kids. Incidentally Manager Thomas has made a few changes in the roster of his Juniors, that he expects will improve his chances in the series.

All four squads B.C.I., O.S.D., Albert College and St. Michael's have been working set whenever possible in preparation for the mammoth senior interscholastic hockey group opening at the Arena on Wednesday night, the senior interscholastic hockey can undoubtedly lay claim to provide good keen competition and plenty of thrills and spills, as the students are set to give the very best of their hockey ability for their Alma Mater. St. Mikes meet Frank Cunningham's O.S.D. seniors in the night-cap affair while those ancient enemies, Belleville Collegiate and Albert College, will be the curtain-raiser of a twin bill. Another feature of the local interscholastic loop will be the innovation of "ten cent" hockey to Belleville fans, two games for a dime, fans, so there's no reason for absence through the lack of the necessary change.

'Last night's sudden drop in the temperature materially assisted the Arena employees and quantity a inch of ice was added to assure splendid sheet, and the fans are skating and also for the games tomorrow night. At that time today the schedule makers of the local senior interscholastic pucksters group will become active and fix dates for the mainder of the schedule. We under, stand that the interscholastic group is to hod forth at the Arena every Wednesday night, thus assuring the fans of one sure night of hockey per week. Then the Industrial loop will be active and fix dates for nights whenever possible and open this week.

Unable to refrain from the game he loves so well Belleville's veteran and popular basketball player, Farley Faulkner, answered the behsted lure of the thrill of the cage game last night when he turned out to practice with Coach Werdon's "hopeful team. Farley still can stalk the floor with the best of them and should prove a decided asset to the cause of the locals. Farley can ably bang centre as well as play back on the rear guard.

A rather unique incident happened in the Montreal Forum last night during the progress of the game between the Canadian Olympic team and the Montreal Royals. Some disgruntled fans erected a sign in the Arena that read: "Canadians want fair play, no Olympics in Nazi Germany." Quite unassuming the two alleged scrappers removed the sign, with little or no interest being shown by the spectators present. Incidentally behind the superb goal tending of "Jimmy" Moore of Port Colborne, the Olympics impressed a scattered few with their 4 to 0 victory over the Quebec metropolis seniors.

There seems to be a "nigger in the wood-pile" some place out in Peterboro'. In the latest reports coming out of the Ltd Lock City, the Peterboro' scribe bawls to high heaven the fact that it was no fault at the Peter re-fuges in Belleville that the hockey worksed potted prior to last Friday night's game, but that the Peterboro' Club responsible for Whitten not appearing in a Belleville uniform or two. In fact, that Earl McDonald had not declared himself available for the season. Just what the Peterboro' scribe is endeavoring to convey we are at a loss to know as there were absolutely no inferences concerning Belleville, that would lead any person to believe that Peterboro' interests were to blame for something that the "Redmen" had left undone. Perhaps the Peterboro' and Belleville sport interests tangle there always seems to be reason for some controversy legitimate or otherwise.

Doug Rumiona, who started his colorful O.H.A. hockey career in a Belleville uniform is one of the outstanding players appearing for the Port Colborne "Sailors" this year, while his younger brother, Ken, is performing for them with the Forts' junior entry. Both good players in any man's league, the Runion boys are out to make their mark in the hockey world and seem headed in the proper direction.

MONTREAL MAY BE CHOSEN AS SITE

If Guarantee Raised, Track And Field Olympic Trials Slated

Montreal, Jan. 14—(CP)—Selection of Montreal as the site of Canada's Olympic track and field trials seemed likely today as the Quebec branch announced with a service club possibility of raising a $1,300 guarantee announced as the minimum the Canadian Olympic committee set as a meeting with heads of various provincial bodies.

Favored by the Committee for its accessible advantage of being at the point of saying it appeared possible finances would be forthcoming Chairman Colonel Sidney Dalton, president of the Quebec Women's Amateur Athletic Association, announced $500 if the Women's meet were held in conjunction with the men's.

Fred Marples, treasurer of the Olympic committee, and acting chairman of the meeting announced the Montreal Exhibition has donated $5,000 to the Olympic Fund and a similar amount would be forth-coming later but stressed the need of support from every branch of finance Canadian representation in Germany.

Announcement was made of a plan to raise funds by selling Olympic buttons at 25 cents each in Dominion-wide campaign. Making the announcement Marples said there was a scarcity of funds this year.

The committee took under advisement a guarantee of $500 for the boxing and wrestling trials made by Leo Burns, President of the Quebec Branch, Amateur Athletic Union of Canada.

Ten Year Stretch on Firing Line Produces 1,100 Scoring Points

By SAM ROBERTSON

New York, Jan. 14 (CP)—The famous hockey attack-line of Frank Boucher and the brothers Cook, Bill and Bun, will battle no more goalies with their puck magic.

Their 10-year stretch on the firing line; described by Boucher—a stretch that produced around 1,100 scoring points and an all-time record for marksmanship — ended yesterday when Manager Lester Patrick gave his fellow-New York Rangers a drastic shakeup.

The ending of the great trium-virate was announced today with a bushel of other shifts from the Ranger-and-American quarters.

Manager Red Dutton of the Americans called up Tony Hemmerling, right-wing, from Rochester Internationals, and Red Doran, rear-guard of the Providence Can-Am Club.

Dedo Klein was demoted to Rochester to make room for Doran, while Calgarian who came down from the northwest a few months ago with a fanfare of legal threats. It was charged the Americs resorted to trickery in recruiting him for their farm team.

Bill Brydge, defenceman, was given a rest. Dutton said the veteran hoof-checker was over-trained.

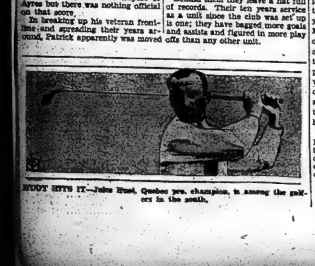
The new lineup "puts the star-spangled club at a time when it is hobbled by injuries. Hal Godden and Tommy Anderson are nursing hurts.

Lynn Gives Rest.

In the Rangers' face-lifting operation, Vernon "Jumbo" Ayres, the hulking defence player, goes to the sidelines "for a rest". It was rumored Patrick planned to dispose of Ayres but there was nothing official on that score.

In breaking up his veteran front-line and spreading their years around, Patrick apparently was moved by the skidding his club has done since the turn of the year. Since Dec. 31 the Rangers have won one, tied one and dropped three. While they hold down second place in the National League's American section, the third place Chicagoans are only a point to the rear and Boston's Bruins another point back. Both these teams have two games in hand over Lester's clan.

At first glance the reorganization looked like master-minding, but that must be left for time. Under it, Bill Cook and Earl Seibert will be the defence wall, with Ching Johnson and Ott Heller combining on another. Hard-hitting Harold Starr will be in reserve.



Boucher will continue to centre the number one line. He will be flanked by Butch Keeling and Glenn Brydson. Bun Cook will patrol left wing, with young Lynn Patrick at pivot and Cecil Dillon at the right post. The third line will have Bert Connolly at centre and Charlie Mason and Murray Murdoch on the wings.

Goalies Grew Grey.

The passing of the Bun-to-Boucher-to-Bill unit marked the end of Lester's counterpart of Canada ball's historic Tinker-to-Evers-to-Chance combination. From the moment when they came out of the west to form the backbone of the newly-organized Rangers in 1926, goalies right around the circuit started sprouting crops of grey hairs.

Their dervish-like skating, all the while flipping the puck from one to the other — Patrick has called it "playing checkers" — flabbergasted net-tenders. They would criss-cross each other's paths until locating the man with the puck at times was as difficult as trying to guess their spots.

Behind them they leave a hat full of records. Their ten years service as a unit since the club was set up is one; they have bagged more goals and assists and figured in more play offs than any other unit.

RAINVILLE IN SOUTH—Here is Marvel Rainville of Montreal, top ranking Canadian tennis star, stroking his way through tournament play on the Miami Biltmore courts in Florida's sunny clime. Rainville was eliminated from the Miami Biltmore tourney after successfully passing his early opponents.

MONTREAL CANADIENS FLY AGAIN, WHIPPING TORONTO LEAFS 7-3—Montreal Canadiens' scarlet-shirted hockey crew looked like the Flying Frenchmen of old, when they whipped the high-flying Toron to Maple Leafs 7-3 in a speed-mad game on Leafs' home ice. The Fivesix Canadian club, led by Flaying Manager Mantha, have adde d a number of promising young stars to their veterans and look to be going places at last. Here they are seen raiding the Leaf neta in one of their forays. Goalie Hainsworth is under the pile of players, mixed up with one of his own defencemen and a Redshirt attacker. Blair, t he other rearguard, is kneeling in the corner of the net, behind the goal. Conacher, No. 10, Canadian forward who had just made a fine shot, Buzz Boll, No. 6, Leaf defenceman, and Joe Primeau, No. 14, in other side. Sivrio Mantha, No. 2, and another Canuck raider are ready for a new thrust, at the LEFT, with Bill Thoms, Leafs No. 14, in close attendance. Incidentally, Canadiens won on to Chicago and whipped Hawks 3-1 the next evening.

"QUEEN MARY" NEARS COMPLETION

This wonderful ship is rapidly coming to life. The first delivery of lubricating oil was made recently by the Shell Company. This particular oil was for the turbo-generators used in connection with her main propelling machinery and also for those which provide the electricity for lights, steering engines, elevators, and other important departments; incidentally these generators are powerful enough to provide electricity for a town of 150,000 inhabitants.

Louis in Action Drawing Power

Chicago, Jan. 14.— (AP)— The outcome, a, quick, crushing triumph for Joe Louis over Charley Retzlaff, seems as certain as tomorrow but the indications are $75,000 worth of spectators will be enough interested in seeing it come to go to the Chicago Stadium Friday night.

The attraction is expected to attract a near-capacity attendance of 20,000. Reports that Louis has not looking so sharp in training may help to pack the stadium.

Louis failed to show any signs of being off form in yesterday's drill. Trainer Jack Blackburn planned to give Louis final examination today in a stiff seven-round session against sparring partners.

Retzlaff, weighing 198 pounds and apparently as ready as he ever will be, worked only four rounds yesterday. He showed ample punching power, tipping over Milo Mimkal, heavyweight from Milwaukee, with a short right to the jaw.

CHIEF ENGINEER DIES

A native of Troon, Scotland, Mr. Cunningham came to Canada in 1908. He retired from his post in the Merchant Marine in 1927. His wife died last December.

Joe Louis, Detroit's Dark Disintegrator, trains to a Chicago gymnasium for his bout, Jan. 17, with Charles Retzlaff, Dakota puncher. The fight will be staged in Chicago stadium.

GUNTER HORNETS CARRYING PLACE GAME WINNERS

Two Fast Games Played in Trenton Hockey Loop

SOME FIGHTING

Boys in Great Condition and Teams Quite Evenly Matched

Trenton, Jan. 14.— (Special) — Carrying Place defeated Smithfield 6 to 3 in the first game of the Trenton and District Hockey League match held in the Arena here last night. In the first period both forward lines skated up and down the ice appearing to be feeling each other out. The line of Vandervoort, Davis and Johnson seemed to be the most effective and gave LaMorre in the Smithfield nets many difficult shots to handle. With the Smithfield line of Drake, Anderson and H. Hansen being the most effective for the applegrowers. After fifteen minutes of the period was played the Smithfield line of Anderson, Drake and Hansen took the play down around the Carrying Place net and as the boys were very active on the ice got roughed up in the corner. Referee Howen called the play and a face off was made at the side of the Carrying Place net.

Smithfield Scores First

In the face off Anderson passed it back to Thompson, who passed it back to Anderson, who flipped it into the net for Smithfield's first goal. The period ended with the "Big Train Line" of Vandervoort, Davis and Johnson pressing hard for Carrying Place. Coach Wm. LaTour of Carrying Place must have given his boys a talking to in the dressing room during intermission for as soon as the second period started Carrying Place forward were all over top of the Smithfield boys and as the tension kept growing the game got a little too rough-an-tumble up. Vieau was given a penalty for boarding Anderson of Smithfield. With the Carrying Place boys raining the puck in on LaMorre in the Smithfield net something was bound to happen and sure enough it did. Five short halfmen through the period Rosenplot—ing it up on a pass from Vieau. The next goal came two minutes later, when Private Bolan Bolan, who was waltzed in on LaMorre in the Smithfield net and gave him no chance at all to stop him. Smithfield then said a four man attack and had Ostell in the Carrying Place nets literally standing on his head to keep him out. The second period ended with the Carrying Place "Big Train Line" swarming around the Smithfield net.

The players of the Carrying Place team were outstanding in the third period and kept Goalie LaMorre of the Applegrowers busy. Both of the Carrying Place scored their third goal from a face off beside the Smithfield net.

Dolan scored the Carrying Place's fourth goal after a fine rush and went through t.e entire Smithfield team. Even then the Smithfield lads laid it on and as the close of the period was drawing near, the boys grew more anxious and were not particular where they carried their sticks as a few four penalties were dealt out. Each team received two. The fifth and last goal for Carrying Place was scored by Davis, who unaided slicked home his way through the Smithfield team drew out Goalie LaMorre and slipped it by him. Right after the face off Rossplot went down into the Smithfield corner and while fighting for the puck with LaMorre came to blows with him. Few punches were struck when the players on both teams parted them. Rossplot received a major penalty.

Penalty Fee Slugging

A few seconds later four of the Carrying Place team received a penalty for slugging. With their numadvantage Smithfield could not score. Carrying Place certainly got a break, when Lamore was put off for knocking Bohan down and had not his happened the Smithfield boys might have tied it up. For as it was Drake was given enough time criticized Carrying Place team to score Smithfield's second goal of the evening. Thompson of the Smithfield team received a penalty for cross-checking and even though their opponents had a man advantage the game ended with the Carrying Place team all around the Smithfield net. Final score Carrying Place 5, Smithfield 2.

Smithfield— Goal, LaMorre; defence, Waldron and Lamoire; wings, Thompson and Hidbery; centre, H. Davis. Alternates—D. Anderson, P. Hansen, H. Hansen, Drake and Corbett. Referee— C. Bowen.

The second game between Gunther's Hornets and Project (28) was a see-saw affair with the Hornets winning 5-3 and Coelle Scott of the Project taking most of the brunt of the play when the Hornets were in the Project territory. The first period was very ragged and had not four goals been scored by the the Hornets it would have proved very dull. The first score came after ten minutes of play, when Ada snared the puck away from Seamen at a face-off on the Project's blue line to score. The second came, when Defoe and Price made their way through the Project's team to slip th rubber past Scott. The next two Hornets goals came in rapid succession and the first was scored by B. Bowen on a pass from Stewart. The next by Miller on a pass from B. Bowen. The project boys seemed to waken up and with a little co-operation Seamen who was the standout for the Project team all night scored their first goal on a pass from Gilmour. The period ended with both forward lines see sawing up and down the ice.

Second Period Lively

The second period livened up a bit, Seamen in Project net did his stuff as he has done in matches before, although he has not had much support in front of him the lasing of games cannot be blamed on him as he performs in the net like a professional. In the first two minutes of play Miller of the Hornet sifted in on Scott and gave him no chance and scored their fifth and last goal of the night. Seamen again returned the compliment by scoring after getting the rebound from his shot. It could be plainly seen that the Hornets who have more material and better equipment had the edge on the play and although they were in front a thousand time could not slip it past him. The third period opened with Teale of the Project in a penalty box for knocking Miller-Millan of the Hornet down from behind. The Hornet forwards swarmed in on Scott in the Project net, laying on his back, out of the net and pot snots, did not seem to make any difference to Scott who turned again and again off the swarming Hornets. The project climaxed the game by scoring their third and last goal.

Line-up—If urnets— Goal, Mann; defence MacMillan and Price; wings Bowen and Stewart; centre, J. Miller. Alternates —Defoe, Bell, Bonter and Hyatt. Project (28) — Goal, Scott; Defence, Bault and Teale; wings, Gilmour and Graham; centre, Seamer. Alternates — Romsiter, Jeit, Dunlop, Stinson, Sills and Braithwaite. Referee — Wm. Miller.

OLYMPICS WIN FROM MONTREAL

Shutout The Best Team Montreal Group Could Muster

Montreal, Jan 14.—(CP)—Protige of Canada's Olympic hockey team took a jump today as scouts critics conceded they were "A better team than Winnipegs though not as strong as Granlies or Varsity Grads" after watching the white clad wearer of the Maple Leaf crest as strong a team as Montreal senior group could produce 4-0 last night.

Bolstered with leading players from other teams, Montreal Royals hurled everything they had at a stout Olympic defence without result as Dinty Moore rose to spectacular heights in goal and the Herman Murray-Fred Ritchien rearguard bodied and checked effectively.

The Fort Colborne veteran held up Olympics throughout the first period as they were slow to hit an effective stride and were outplayed by a wide margin Olympics opened up from the start of the second period and before it was over had piled up a three goal lead then went on to stretch it to four with the only goal of the third period.

Smooth-working Ken Farmer supplied most of the punch in Olympics attack as the little Montreal Victorias winger pumped two goals in and aided in a third. Arnold Deacon counted one goal and assisted in another and Hugh Parquharson was on the scoring end of a pass from Dave Neville to complete Royals' defeat.

Farmer was loaned to Olympics for last night's game, by Victoria's, who also supplied Ken Murray to Royals. Med Martel, George Brown, Columban Ethier and Paul Arcand of Verdun Maple Leafs strengthened the Olympics' opposition.

"Shanghai Rose"

By Anne Forester

"Obliu does queer things to a man sometimes, Rose; especially to a man alone. It gets you. You lose your perspective. The night I dropped in at Scudmore's Cabaret—and I never go to cabarets—I was lonely. I'd had a row with Jeff—you know how it is when you're married. Married to the last person on earth I'd have thought of, Harvey Therrold! And there was Therrold—kid from my own home town! . . . You can't imagine what that news did to me!"

Across the commonplace little kitchen on River Street there dawned for a moment the flaring, writhing wraithe of that fabulous patronment, tattooed forever on the retina of his memory . . . .

"I quit going to Scudmore's—but I couldn't get you out of my mind. You are Rose, you know! You are something—something I'd always wanted, and never had. You are perfection—a lily growing in the mud! Well—you know what Kipling says: I had my own matches and sulphur, and I made my own hell. But I wouldn't you believe it?

"But, Larry, I didn't get them!" She was not crying, but the gray eyes were luminous with unshed tears; her pain on his own never faltering.

"Then you didn't. I love 'em up. After all, I had some sense! It just sort of eased something within. In his touch—in his voice, I mean—I got some crazy sort of notion that maybe you'd got enough of Harvey Therrold after awhile. His war-cash . . . Hopelessly compared to you. Oh, I liked Harvey. But a man can't balmy notions in the head. I suppose I dreamed a mad dream that perhaps some day I'd worked toward getting a decent job on some good paper I could offer to you and win your love for myself. And just about that time I lost my job. I'm added to the international shuffle-city. And Harvey bumped into me one day when I was shot down in my last sou—and made me a little proposition that sounded swell. I wish to God I'd never listened to him!" he said furiously, anguished, and he continued, obviously struggling through his voice. He got out of his chair and walked restlessly around it, coming back after a moment to drop spreader-ly down into its depths.

"Larry, what was it?" The girl sat motionless, all but her live, burning eyes.

"Harvey had an idea that he wanted to buy a newspaper. There was a good one for sale in this city. He was to be the publisher; I was to manage the thing. He knew I was a good newspaper man; knew that I had a pretty good drag with the people who counted, he said. I was to be the go-between, besides writing my own editorial office after the sale. Harvey was to furnish the capital. Naturally, I thought that meant he'd get the money from Jeff—from his folks. I didn't. Do I have to tell you the rest?"

Rose nodded dumbly. "He got it from——by forging the name of Austin Deering to that check!" he finished grimly.

"Oh, Larry!"

"The first I knew about this—and I ask you to believe me, Rose, for this is the truth—was when he simply talked me into it. Into the money. Just dropped out of sight; wasn't seen at his old haunts; no one seemed to know anything about him. I waited two weeks, then figured he'd just run on me. (You see, I grew up with Harvey and know his kinks.) And when I got a chance came for me to earn my pass back to the States, I took it. And came home.

"That was when he got so sick—he was sick for weeks and then he died." Rose said wonderingly.

"And left you holding the sack on that check?" Larry burst out. "If he'd even kept the money he got for that—but to toss it in a rotten dice game; to have you and that kid——"

"Larry, he didn't know he was going to die. He didn't—" Rose stopped. "What was the use?.....It simply brought the whole thing back.

"You shouldn't have paid Dearing a cent, of course—but it was like you! Oh, I love you so, Rose! It's all behind me now; you could—I'm, you wouldn't, let this thing stand in the way of our happiness!" It was the shamed small boy in him who spoke, but it was the man in him that suddenly pulsated hungrily into the encompassing circle of his arms and held her close. The girl leaned for a moment against the strength of his broad shoulder, feeling nothing, thinking of nothing. She was so tired, so bewildered, herself. Life was so confused, so fraught with strange terrors and uncertainties..... Larry was dear and generous and kind. He needed her..... The thought brought her sharply to herself. Harvey had used his need of her as a scourge and a shackle that bound her....Slowly Rose Therrold began to speak.....

Half an hour later, when the man rose to go, Rose felt she had accomplished her end. Somehow, without hurting him, without making him feel that it was some lack in himself—she had made it come to him at last. And in two days he would be leaving; that was the part that hurt most.....

"I suppose I'm glad to go," he had said brooding, "unless you've once lived in the Orient, you don't want to go back. Maybe you're right, Rose. When I get used to the idea I may think so, too, but right now I'm wondering what old Confucius said: 'If one word misses its mark a thousand will do the same.' At last I'm going to give the old boy a run for his money. I'm going to keep along you—and some day you may change your mind." He smiled at her out of unbelievably unhappy eyes. "Only to get back to the job," he said again. "Well—it's Christmas..... I would you—let me kiss you good-night?"

Leaning against the friendly worn panel of the door, after he had gone, Rose felt as though all of life had gone with him.

CHAPTER M.

ROSE GIVES THE ALARM

"You don't mind having to stay in the store this evening, do you, Mis Therrold? It'll only be until eight o'clock—this bein' New Year's Eve and all! I told Mr. Merta I hated to ask you, but my land! When that man gets his heart on a thing you might 'swell talk to the Cyclops of Etypt as him!"

"You know I don't, Lottie," Rose smiled into the puckered face regarding her anxiously from the doorway. "Bertha's always glad to take Kitten for a night; and, with everyone know away tonight, it would have been pretty lonely at the house for me. At least I can watch folks moving about up here."

Her glance, going through the frost-rimmed window of Welch's Store, touched the cold, snow-filled expanse of street, where bent figures, heads lowered against the swirling flakes of snow, forged incessantly back and forth on the pavement outside. New Year's Eve, And the village—even the mill-end of town—celebrating in its own placid way.

There was a light tonight in the windows of the Mill Office, Jeffrey Therrold, was back at his desk again, Rose knew—back after the absence of several days. All evening her eyes had turned toward that steady gleam; all evening her frenzied thoughts had churned on, wondering how soon.....how soon.....Wondering what Jeffrey Therrold would say to the tale Austin Deering would tell him. Would he believe it? Oh, he couldn't! He must know her better than that. But suppose he did—Jeff Therrold did unexpected things—suppose he even refused to give her a chance to explain? Larry was gone; she had let him go without a word. Vaguely, in the face of Larry's own bitterness of heart, the girl had found it impossible to mention Austin Deering's name. Larry was gone.....she had not yet quite taken that in. Missing him would come later. Just now she groped blindly through a morass of bewilderment and pain. Waiting, as she had waited all week—for the blow hat was sure to fall.

"I declare, I don't know," Lottie's plaintive voice trailed back into the room, followed by the voluminous billows of Lottie's turkey gown. "I'll have to give her a piece of my mind, that's what I will! Here I am, doin' the right thing going off like this tonight in that bus to meet that Otto Mertel!"

"Now, Lottie, don't be foolish! Of course you are!" said Rose.

Mr. Merta, it appeared, having been delayed on his regular route about the countryside by the Xorra, had telephoned Lottie early in the evening, suggesting that, instead of his coming all the way in to Catherwood tonight, Lottie should take the bus alone and meet him at the County Seat. The bus ran right to the door of the Town Hall and he would be waiting there with his car.

"Well—". Lottie made a hesitant move toward the door. "I suppose I better be goin', then—unless I want to miss the Grand March, too! Nothing makes Mr. Merta madder," she said, "than to start of a dance that he'll be fit to be tied, as it is," she sniffed. "Makin' me come all that way in by myself!"

The wind, as she opened the door and went out, emitted an icy draught across the floor of the store. The warm, flimsy windows rattled and shook, and Rose shivered as she turned back to the glow of the stove. There wouldn't be many customers out tonight. Eight o'clock would come soon and she'd be back in the familiar peace of her own little room at home. With her friendly, shabby books, the spilled radiance of her lighted lamp, the cold, depressing presence of the world shut firmly out into the night.

TARZAN THE INVINCIBLE (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service).

The quiet and peace of her surr.....ings tended to soothe Zora's nerves, but the man remained a mystery to her. Although he had showed no intention of harming her, she could not as yet conceive that he had other than malign designs, and awaited him fearfully.

As she pondered him, Tarzan returned, bearing a great load of Brachus. He constructed a shelter upon the bank of the rivulet, enclosed it upon three sides so that it formed a protection against the winds. He floored it with leaves and small twigs and dry grasses.

Then he bore the gift in his arms to the rustic hover. Once again he left her, and when he returned he brought a little fruit which he fed her sparingly, for he guessed that she had been long without food and knew that she must not overtax her stomach.

Always he worked in silence, and though no word had passed between them, Zora Drinor felt a growing conviction of trustworthiness. The next time he left her she was gone a considerable time, but still the elephant stood in the clearing, like some titanic sentinel.

'Stay Seated' Strike is On

(By George Hambleton)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, Jan. 14.—(CP Cable)—Worshippers at the Little Stoham Baptist Church of Maclem, Monmouth shire, have developed a new form of strike. It is a "stay-seated" strike.

During the singing of the hymns Number eight, part of the congregation remained seated. They refused to join in the Lord's Prayer. They ignored the collection boxes.

This curious episode is the latest development in a dispute which has divided the congregation ever since the trustees called in Rev. Timothy Hughes to resign.

Hughes, a labor member of the Monmouth County Council, says the trouble "appears to be political".

A week ago Hughes found the church door locked against him. Yesterday however, his supporters followed him in a body to the church and he was able to conduct the service.

CHILDREN LEAVE BEFORE EXCITED

Mother Issues Order But Oldest Girl Thinks of Plan

Cleveland, Jan. 14.—(UP)—A few hours before their mother was to drive them into the street with an eviction order Monday night, the seven children of Mrs. Olga Wenke, Cleveland housewife, packed their belongings and left her house.

The mother, a chambermaid and housekeeper, wife of Elmer Malone, father of the children, had not yet appeared with the court order when the children started piling their rickety furniture in a moving van.

The woman obtained the eviction order a week ago to clear the house for a paying tenant. Mrs. Wendland, who resumed her maiden name four months ago holds legal title to the house although it was purchased with her former husband's money. Malone obtained custody of the children a month ago when granted a divorce on grounds that his wife was continually drunk.

The children, mothered by 20-year-old Hazel, the eldest, moved into a two-room flat on the west side provided by their father, a 42-year-old machinist.

Mrs. Wendland had warned her daughter that "if you do not get out of there by nightfall Monday, you'll be thrown out."

"We didn't wait for the deadline because we were afraid of what might happen if we didn't clear out," Hazel said.

4 NAMES MENTIONED IN TORY LEADERSHIP

Toronto, Jan. 14.—(CP)—Ontario Conservatives yesterday set in motion the machinery which will lead to selection of a party leader in the province.

At a gathering called for later in the day a committee of 18 candidates defeated in the last provincial election and seven of those who held their seats will be chosen to arrange for the convention which it was decided some time ago must be held before May 15.

At least four names have been mentioned in connection with the Party leadership now held by George S. Henry. They are Leopold Macaulay, member for York South; W. H. Price, Toronto Parkdale; Hon. W. H. Hart Howe, minister without portfolio in the Bennett Government, and former mayor W. J. Stewart of Toronto.

WAR ORDER BOOM THEME AT PROBE

Deflation Could Not be Foreseen, J. P. Morgan Chuckles

Washington, Jan. 14 (AP)—Assurances which J. P. Morgan gave in 1915 France and Britain could never be forced to go back on their debts in United States were brought to light in the Senate investigation of war-time finance.

With the utterly banker steadfastly denying booming war trade led the United States into the world conflict, an investigation accordingly questioned the fairness of methods used in floating a $50,000,000 issue of British and French bonds here.

Morgan termed his company's efforts for the bonds an "educational campaign" and insisted it was conducted properly. Morgan stoutly contended great war profits "helped this country" and did not lead us into the war.

"Is it a healthful thing for a country to have the whole business on the strength of war orders?" began Senator Vandenberg (R. Mich). "Isn't it already followed by destructive deflation."

"I couldn't say that could be seen ahead," Morgan chuckled.

Senators and Morgan partners then sharply debated the cause of the United States post-war deflation.

"Capital and commissions," suggested Vandenberg. Morgan grinned.

Processing Tax To be Returned

Washington, Jan. 14 (AP)— The United States Supreme Court ruled that $200,000,000 of processing taxes impounded by the courts must be returned to the taxpayers, refused to pass on the validity of the Farm Bond Ootion Act at this time and adjourned without ruling on the constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act.

The tax decision did not go into whether processors had to prove they had not passed the tax on the consumers before they could recover, a main point at issue. The decision was unanimous.

Little Benny's Note Book

Us four flying Trapeze Artists was wawking to school trying to think up a place where we could keep our secret that we intended out in the back street, Puds Simkins saying, by wiminies, there must be some place we can keep it, this world cant be as small as all that.

Well, I said, and Shorty Judge saying, Aw, how about taking Mr. Gladkens, be mite leave to keep it down in the basement.

Mr. Gladkens being the janiter of our school, and sitting by the fire, Aw him, he wouldn't even leave us keep a empty potato bag in his cawn there one time when I asked him.

What did you want to keep a empty potato baskit for? I said, and Shorty Judge said, I forgit now, but anyways he wouldn't leave me, and that's the main thing, so you know how much chance we've got of keeping a whole bedspring down there.

Suppose we offer him a one 5th intrist in it? Puds said, and Shorty said, Aw, that wouldn't appeal to him, he's too old to enjoy jumping on it, and besides his shoes are mits m.ke him lose his ballenis too easy.

Well good nite we cant be arrested for keeping him, I said. And after school Mr. Gladkens was out in the schoolyard dusting out blackboard erasers and saying all things to himself every time the chawk got in his nnoze against his will, and us Flying Trapeze Artists went and stood in back of him in a commitity, and he looked around saying, What's all the gallery about, do you want something?

Well somebody had to anser something and it didn't seem to be the rite time for the rite answer, so I said, We fought maybe you'd like to help you.

The reason being us fellows was cleaning blackboard erasers and Mr. Gladkens wasn't anywheres in site, being more like dotton it for him than helping him.

Transcontinental Air Liner Crashes in Arkansas Swampland

Swift Death Takes 17; Bodies Terribly Mangled And Plane Total Wreck

UNKNOWN CAUSE

Radio Communication Established Five Minutes Before Crash

By W. L. Campbell

(Copyright 1936, by the Associated Press)

Goodwin, Ark., Jan. 15.—(AP)—Appalled by the worst disaster of North American plane travel, volunteers struggled through the deep mud and water today to recover the mangled forms of seventeen persons killed by the crash of the luxurious air liner "Southerner" in an Arkansas swamp.

Twelve men, four women, one child made up the list of passengers and the crew of three, who rode the ill-fated ship on Memphis-Dallas hop over the regular New York-Los Angeles flight last night.

Thirteen of the eight of the bodies were brought out of a dense swamp today.

They were brought out on a flat-bed farm wagon drawn by two mules which had difficulty in making the trip out of the swamp. The bodies were taken to a Memphis Funeral Home where it was hoped definite identification could be made.

A Department of Commerce official, viewing the splintered wreckage, said the cause of the disaster probably would be known...

Plane ... coiled were torn to shreds as the liner crashed through a dense growth of trees, scattering plane parts and the bodies over an area 600 yards long and about 75 yards wide. It was the fourth case to rest in a water-filled bog.

Coroner Carried to

J. O. Crawford, aged, crippled coroner of St. Francis County, was carried horizontally on a stretcher through the swamps to the scene before dawn to hold an inquest.

He was held aloft by four men, standing deep in water, as they examining the bodies, heard two farmers who said they saw the plane fall and made notes in a small book by the light of lanterns.

On stretchers the bodies which had been recovered were carried before him, and with the assistance of Cecil West of the Little Rock Airport, who held a pocketlight, he attempted identification.

Many of the entries in the coroner's book were ... "unidentified female". "Woman—name unknown."

The body of Pilot Reed Chambliss was that of W. B. Hardwick of Brandonsood, Ill.

Describes Scene

M. E. Davis, one of the first to reach the scene said:

"I can't remember the wreckage, but what it amounted to was finding the large pieces of the plane with one wing gone, the other wing gone, torn to pieces, the motors torn out of the mud, and buried in the ground.

"The bodies, the bodies were scattered all over the place, most of the bodies being near the motors.

"I understood there was a child on the ship, but I found the child's shoes, near the motors, but not the body.

"There was baggage and mail scattered all over the place. The cabin of the plane was gone, but one side wall standing. Two bodies near the motors looked like they might have been the pilots."

Goodwin, Ark., Jan. 15.—(AP)—Hurtling into an Eastern Arkansas swamp a Transcontinental air liner last night carried seventeen persons to swift death and wrote the most tragic chapter of North American airplane travel.

Air line officials today hastened plans to remove the bodies of four women and thirteen men from the mire of a wooded marshland near here.

Simultaneously company and United States Government officials launched investigations to determine the cause of the tragedy, one of the greatest disasters in aviation annals as well as the worst in point of lives lost.

The luxurious Douglas twin motored ship, en route from New York to Los Angeles, left Memphis about 7 o'clock (C.S.T.) last night for Little Rock, seventy minutes away, but about twenty-five minutes later it had ripped across the tree tops and

Outlook Improved for Cheese Products by Increased Exports

Recent Agreement With U.S. Stands to Benefit Canada

PRODUCTION DOWN

London, Ont., Jan. 15 (CP)—With "additional possible outlet for our exportable surplus products in the form of cheese and cream," the outlook for the dairy industry is much improved over last year, J. B. Hamilton of Atwood, president of the Dairymen's Association of Western Ontario, said in his presidential address today at the 68th annual convention of the association.

Canada, he said, stands to benefit by increased exports of cattle, hogs and cheese to the United States. There is need, however the president said, for an adjustment of prices as between the various milk products.

"Each branch of the industry," he asserted, "interlocks and must be considered as a whole, but it must be remembered that some unbalance in the price levels will result unless we be devised whereby prices for cheese, butter, etc., shall be given a correction in line with that of market milk, which to some extent is now under control.

"For instance, our output of cheese during 1935 amounted to 224,000,000 pounds, while for the past few years this has dropped to around 160,000,000 pounds. Although milk production has increased during this period, the reduction in cheese manufactured is largely in the form of cheese, it should tend to stabilize our better markets and at the same time maintain our continuity of supply of cheese abroad.

In the discussion period, moved by Frank Harris of London, secretary, it was said, that a relatively low price for cheese manufacturing the past few years has been a factor in reducing productions.

RUDYARD KIPLING—Word from London today states that the British poet is showing further improvement though great anxiety is still felt.

CONCEDED ESTATE OF H. VERMILYEA NOT TO BENEFIT

Justice Makins Reserves Judgment on Disposition of Quarter Share

Toronto, Jan. 15 (CP) — It was conceded the estate of Harold Vermilyea, executed at Belleville, Ont., last May 7, for the murder of his mother, Mrs. Caroline Aurelia Vermilyea, could not benefit under Mrs. Vermilyea's will, Mr. Justice J. C. Makins noted today after hearing arguments upon an application for the estate to be made to him at Osgoode Hall.

His Lordship reserved judgment upon the question whether the share of Mrs. Vermilyea's estate, which Harold Vermilyea might have inherited should be treated as in the case of an intestate or should fall into the residue of the estate.

Should Mr. Justice Makins decide there was an intestacy with respect to Harold Vermilyea's fourth share of the matter of the estate, that share would be divided among Vermilyea's two children, Catharine Aurelia and Nathaniel, who live in California, and the husband of Mrs. James A. Faulkner, Arthur F. Vermilyea, brother of Harold Vermilyea. The children of Harold Vermilyea would receive each one eighth of their father's share of the estate.

On the other hand, if the share of Harold Vermilyea fell into the residue of the estate, his children would receive nothing and his share would be divided equally between Mrs. Faulkner, Arthur Vermilyea and Clarence Vermilyea.

SENATOR CHARGES COL. ED. M. HOUSE WITH COLLUSION

Says Agreement Made to Bring U.S. Into War Without Knowledge of Congress

FIRMS BLACKLISTED

Senate Enquiry Discloses England Published List of "Unfriendly" Companies

Washington, Jan. 15 (AP) — A charge that Colonel Edward M. House, confidential adviser to Woodrow Wilson, agreed to bring the United States into the World War without the knowledge of Congress was made today by Senator Clark (D., Mo.).

J. P. Morgan remained at his hotel Corsair, George Whitney, one of his partners, remained as an observer of the Senate inquiry.

Clarke declared he had seen an agreement between House and Sir Edward Grey, British Foreign Secretary, for a peace conference.

House had forwarded the proposal which Armistead if Germany refused to agree the United States "probably" would join the Allies.

"Blacklist" of Firms.

Evidence England published a "blacklist" of "unfriendly" American industrial firms was also introduced.

Excerpts from Colonel House's diary, dated as of June 22, 1918, said:

"I am, I must admit, about at the end of my patience with Great Britain and the Allies. This last week has been the last straw. I am seriously considering asking Congress to declare war, to prohibit loans and restrict exportations to the Allies. It is becoming clear to me that there lies latent in this policy the wish to prevent our remaining Allies from getting a foothold in markets which Great Britain has hitherto enjoyed and all but dominated. Polk and I are compounding a very sharp note. I may feel obliged to send it. It is sharp and final as the one to Germany on the submarine."

Prolongation of War.

In his diary House also expressed belief the French and English were prolonging the war unnecessarily and urged that they accept our proffered intervention on the terms I proposed to them and Germany.

"I made it clear to both governments in the event of intervention that we would not consummate a peace that did not bring with it a plan by which all nations could disarm. peace, as far as human foresight could see, will be impossible except by force it. It would mean the end of militarism and it would also mean an end of navalism and that perhaps is where the shoe pinches."

POLICE DEPARTMENT BEFUDDLES PATROLMAN

Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 15 (AP), Harvard University Yard Leary walks his beat in the East Cambridge district befuddled by this department's latest order.

Seven times in seven days Patrolman Leary has been transferred.

Each time, he was inspected, Leary. A shakeup was ordered, and he became Patrolman Leary. Then another shakeup and he again walking a beat.

Then another shakeup, the shakeup was shaken up and he again became inspector Leary. Another shakeup came and he was Patrolman Leary was again a patrolman.

Then another shakeup and a patrol man-is-inspector and an inspector-to-patrolman shift and he became Leary by now — there was one more inspector-to-patrolman switch.

Leary reported for street duty last night — but, of course, it may be only temporary.

Car Cuts Crazy Capers After Owner Cranks Same While in Gear

Toronto, Jan. 15 (CP)—Roch Ghovanzi was a little worn out today after trying to keep pace with his automobile as it cut crazy capers after he cranked it, while the machine was in gear.

First the car backed up, twisting a fender as it struck a light standard. Then, with Giovanetti racing madly behind it, the machine crossed the street and broke a second fender against another pole. Back it careened to the opposite side of the street and broke a wheel before remembering over the curb again, landing its top on a tree and a third fender on another pole.

Then it was for Giovanetti to get a new one," muttered Giovanetti.

Rate of Taxation for Provincial Income Tax One Half Dominion Rate

28 P.C. HIGHEST RATE

Entails No Loss to Municipalities Who Formerly Taxed For Income

Toronto, Jan. 15 (CP)—Ontario had the unique privilege today of collecting an Income Tax bill, designed to yield the Treasury of the Ontario Government $15,000,000 before it had been introduced in the Legislature. Right after the budget measure will be brought down in the House, Acting Premier Nixon made his details public last night.

For the first time all single persons in Ontario with annual incomes in excess of $1,000 and married persons with an income larger than $2,000 will be taxed by the Provincial Government. The rate of taxation will be announced before one-half that of the Dominion Government.

Range 1½ to 28 P. C.

It ranges from 1½ per cent in the lowest bracket to 28 per cent in the highest. Exemptions of $400 for each child dependent under 21 and $1,000 for single persons" and $2,000 for married are the same as those under the Dominion Income Tax law.

Municipalities will lose the right to impose personal taxation when the Legislature has approved the Provincial law. No other legislation will be considered by the Ontario Treasury until January 21. In the absence in the South of Premier Hepburn the bill will be introduced by Mr. Nixon.

It will not entail any loss of revenue to municipalities which formerly made a levy on income, the Government has made it clear. Such municipalities will be reimbursed by Ontario until Provincial Treasury will be swelled by receipts from taxpayers who live in municipalities which did not tax in their own behalf.

1935 Business Taxed

In taking the unusual step of making public legislation before presenting it to the House, Acting Premier Nixon explained it was done to allow municipalities affected should know what revenue they will receive. The Income Tax Act before budgetting for 1936. He said 1935 income will be taxed.

Reasons for releasing copies of the bill in advance, Mr. Nixon said, were to allow time for Legislature could study its terms. He was hopeful the bill could be put to pass it without delay. Tax returns must be filed before April 30 and the bill is expected to Corporation tax is left in the hands of the Dominion which cannot contribute to collect income taxes.

Mr. Nixon said in handing copies of the bill to reporters last night: "This measure is fair and just both to taxpayer and municipality. It will accelerate the development of the Province. Distributing the weight of taxation more equitably, it will remove a great deal of the burden now borne by the property owner and the small-salaried employee."

Dominion to Collect

Collection of the tax will be left with the facilities of the Dominion Government. Mr. Nixon said the Province had considered the possibility of setting up a collection agency of its own but the Federal authorities have agreed to do the work.

REQUEST SAND FOR ICY SIDEWALKS

"Go sand on your sidewalks—not ashes" is the request of the department of public works to householders who have been covering the contents of their ash pans on icy spots in front of their homes this season given by city engineer Sidney Ponton. It is claimed that the heaviest climbers and lumps are washed from the walks down the drains clogging the basins and sewers.

Sand will be delivered free at home by the department when a telephone call, it is pointed out. All that is needed is a suitable container.

"We have to use cinders on the roads for winter traffic, but it would help a lot if the people would just stick to the sand for their sidewalks" commented the engineer.

"Mister Hobo" Produced From Famous Comedy by Paul Lafitte

The suave, the aristocratic George Arliss, as plain hobo! There's a dissimilation to make the screen world wonder, confronted as a contradiction in terms. And yet, strange as it may seem, it is precisely the role the polished first gentleman of the screen" has chosen for his new picture, "Mister Hobo," coming Thursday to the Capitol theatre.

This certainly appears to come under the heading of "screen news." Who does not associate the mesmeric magic of Disraeli, the stately mien and carefully calculated dignity, the flash of splendor, the Candyism, and brilliance! Rolex swaggering with the richness of a Rajah as in "Disraeli," or dashing and masterful, as the "Duke of Wellington." Always in the part he was the perfect gentleman . . . the man of manners . . . the glass of fashion and the mold of form.

"Mister Hobo" presents Arliss without the usual panoply of grand manners. His famous mannerisms will put in mothballs! His tailor was told to take a vacation! His . . . well you get the idea being here answered, that for a picture which is as near to nothing years was needed but the seedy duds of a gentleman of the road, one of those happy-go-lucky wights who prefer to live by their wits and luck where they find it . . . making a night of it in someone's barn, and under privileged to share the cooking up a mess of somebody's eggs . . . contributed by somebody's provender.

An Extraordinary Accomplishment

Much speculation is provided by this unexpected transformation, information from other cities where the picture is now holding down, fail is as an extraordinary accomplishment. It is a picture, reviewers say, that testifies to the Arliss versatility . . . his ability to interpret the character itself as the mighty. He penetrates the soul of a lovable vagabond with the same understanding of temperament that he did the sinister rajah of "The Green Goddess," the inscrutable old gent of John Galsworthy's "Old English," for the haughty general of "The Iron Duke."

The setting is France. The story portrays a genial tramp who is genuinely in love with his vocation. "Spike" and his pal "Pin" go the length and breadth of the countryside with fairs, following the timber's trade here and there. They wind up, through a comedy of errors, in Dijon, the capital of the hero's name with another man's, as a prodigious and great Parisian bank. But old "Spike" can't stay put. The lure of the road beckons. Frustrially the two old fellows give up luxury, forfeit social and financial position, and return to the open road.

It's a case, you see, of "rags to riches" and back again to rags.

Bright, Sparkling Story

During the filming of "Mister Hobo" George Arliss found the role had many points in common. The great actor could keep his old pipe burning on the road, as one of affectionately calls it, for it has accompanied him in all the road business. Then he was able to wear old, comfortable clothes. For once he could forget dignity, dignimality. The collars and cuffs of his shapeless, unpressed coat, the soiled and ragged, an effect obtained by rubbing them with a sooty brush. His baggy and patched trousers flung in festoons round his legs.

If the free while, materially, the sort of life every man feels he would like to lead always, after not having to dress decorously for business.

Heard Five Minutes Before Crash

Radio communication, between the plane and stations was maintained until four minutes before the fatal crash. The last report was an "All Well" sent from 7,000 feet at 7:11.

"The Department of Commerce and Canadian Pacific Airlines both began service over this particular route just a few months ago, and to find in the shredded remains of the big plane a clue as to what happened is the task before investigators, which sent the liner to death.

The bodies were scattered for more than 100 feet through the swamp, which was difficult of access.

The plane was literally torn to pieces, its luxurious cabin ripped from the fuselage and left all to smashed through the trees.

Body Is Identified

Many of the bodies, that lay in the swamp were mangled beyond recognition.

Among the passengers was W. B. Dyer, Chief Inspector of Explosives for Arkansas, and one of his aides, Lee Angelo, Jr., both of Little Rock.

Another was Frank C. Hart, wealthy New Yorker, president of the Hartol Products Company, recent defendant in a $250,000 damage action brought by Mrs. Florence Talbot, whose husband committed her in a Greenwich Village apartment.

The plane left Newark, N.J., yesterday afternoon, bound for Los Angeles.

Gerald V. Marshall, 40, veteran pilot, with the company since 1928, and with 9,400 flying hours under his belmet, was in charge of the ship. The copilot was Oliver Newman, former manager of a Joplin, Mo., airport. Mrs. Marshall, Capitol, 23, of Fort Worth, stewardess, completed the crew of "unfortunates".

Plane in Good Shape

Pilot Walter Hunter brought the ship from Newark to Memphis, said President C. R. Smith of American Airlines at Fort Worth, Texas.

"At Memphis," said Smith, "Pilot Hunter reported that the airplane was in excellent flying shape and that both motors were functioning fine. At Memphis, the airplane was taken by Pilot Gerald Vaughan Marshall, Co-pilot Glenn Forehand and Stewardess Feria Gasparini.

"When the plane was heard an hour overdue at Little Rock and no further word was received it had been reported, the company authorities, searching parties to start out from both Memphis and Little Rock.

Subsequently the airlines dispatched five ambulances to Brinkley, near Jeny, announcing the action as a precautionary measure".

J. W. Fogg, farmer, one of the searchers, reported:

"They're all dead. You don't need a doctor. The plane—what's left of it—is buried in five feet of mud and water".

Three Generations Victims

The victims included three generations of one Wakefield Mass., family en route to California for a month's vacation. They were Mrs. Samuel Horwitz about 36, her 61-year-old mother, Mrs. B. Horovitz and her four-year-old son, Seba, the death of Julian Chas. Sebe, 26-year-old buyer for the May Company in Los Angeles, was the second in his family in the last few weeks. He was returning from a New York business trip which had been the interrupted at its start by the death of his father.

Charles Alsohul, 23, of Glendale, Calif., was a licensed plane pilot and the son of a wealthy New York family. He was a Yale graduate and had been taking a course in advanced flying at Glendale.

Two Leave Ship

Two passengers were believed to have escaped the fate of the others by leaving the ill-starred ship shortly before it crashed.

W. Showard, managing editor of the Nashville, Tennessean, arrived from Washington where he had been a guest of Arkansas, and one of his aides, Lee Angelo, Jr., both of Little Rock.

POLICE BLOTTER

The average of transients stopping over night at the Belleville police station is slightly lower than for the months than during the last three months of 1935. The average for the first 14 nights of January 1936 was slightly over ten per night, while the average for the last two months of 1935 was an even dozen each night. Thus far in January, up until the night of the 14th, 144 transients have been afforded warm sleeping facilities at the police station this year. The largest number was last night, when 17 weary travelers slumbered undisturbed in the cell block, while smallest number to apply any one night was on the evening of Jan. 12th when only three signed the register.

Activities proved rather quiet and serene in and around local police circles during the past 24 hours, no arrests being necessary. A local motorist fell into the clutches of the law however, when he drove his automobile along Front St. Displaying only one headlight after sun down. A summons will be issued and the delinquent will appear in police court Friday. A concerted drive against "one eyed motor vehicles" has been launched by Provincial and local authorities. Today marks the last day in which 1935 license plates may be used on motor vehicles operated in Ontario, those in possession of their 1936 plates will face prosecution tomorrow, police stated today.

Provincial police today are working fervently to endeavour unearthing clues that may lead to the identity of the burglars who entered the summer cottages at Massassaga Point and stole household goods late last week.

ROMANCE OF THE MINISTRY IS TOLD

Rev. Dr. James Semple Delivers Inspiring Address to Kiwanians

If the percentage of members attend throughout the year as were present on Tuesday for the Kiwanis luncheon at the Queen's Hotel, the club will no doubt have a high standing in the district. It was the first meeting at which the new president, Frank Dunnelon presided, and he congratulated Phil McKee, chairman of the attendance committee for the effort put forth. The president promised that the meetings would be snappy and over in the allotted time, so that members could attend to their individual businesses. Rev. Dr. James Semple of Bridge Street United Church was the first speaker for the year's program and he set a high standard for others to follow with his address, "Romance of the Ministry."

Members Congratulated

The club members congratulated John McIntosh, past president of the club, on his election as a director of the Chamber of Commerce, and Middis Shapiro as a member of the Parks Board. Another boy work in the club is in full swing with Arthur Gill as chairman of the agriculture committee, submitting the first report. This committee requested the club to put forth an effort to see that the trees in the city were properly taken care of and that new trees be planted to take the place of those cut down and destroyed by decay. The move was considered a worthy one and the suggestion will be passed on to the council and also to the Parks Board.

At a meeting of the directors after the luncheon, it was decided to continue with the Tri-Y hockey league, the games to be played at the Belleville Arena. It will cost the club considerably more than in past years because of the rais of pay for ice privileges but the directors were agreed it would not be wise to let this important work drop. At first it was proposed to have but three series, but the directors passed a small amount and colors for juniors, seniors and younger children will have their league in as in former years. The league will get underway in the near future. The program committee under Gordon Gray announced their program for next two weeks ahead and a good time is promised the members.

Wishaw Trek Success

The speaker of the day was introduced by Fred Deacon and Evanian appreciation was expressed by Harold Seldon. In opening his address, Dr. Semple wished for the club every success in the coming year, stating that he knew of the good work being done by service clubs in the city. Speaking on the subject "The Romance of the Ministry," Dr. Semple stated that probably it would be a dry subject but yet there was a wealth of thought in this romance. He gave several reasons why he was in the ministry, first being by conviction because at the age of eight years, the speaker wrote an essay and in it he expressed the thought he would like to be a minister or a missionary and "since that time I have never changed my mind," said Dr. Semple. "If I had another chance, I would like to be a criminal lawyer. The second reason advanced was that the ministry was not a man's job and the biggest man will be none too big for the task. A minister is not a man who thinks himself better than his neighbor and a minister does not desire to lord it over his fellowman. "A minister is subjected to many temptations as subtle as the devil himself," said the speaker and "a minister is not a saint but a sinner like his fellowmen and he does not believe, that he is empowered from on high to dragoon people into doing something that he wishes done and the last reason stated was that a belief not workable had no place in his thinking."

Asking the question: "What is a Parson for?" the speaker answered it by saying, that he should be a friend and adviser to all on the road. Dealing with the evil spirits in the church of other times, Dr. Semple stated that radio had a place in the world but that public speaking from the pulpit was the best way to get direct contact with the people. Dr. Semple has had a brilliant career in the ministry, holding charges from Newfoundland in the east to the border line between Saskatchewan and Alberta on the west and there were romances in the places that he had visited. Then there were the romances of parsonage and romances of the various churches and romances of the people met in these various charges but he was determined that the object in any congregation that he took charge in closing would dictate his course. In closing the speaker stated, that the best one had to offer was none too good for the Christian ministry and that he had no apology to make for any fight, that he had made for the betterment of corruption and sin. "The ministry does not offer ease nor wealth but unselfish service and the chance to be a courageous pathfinder or Christian," said Dr. Semple. Bill Anderson collected the fines; Harold Seldon led the community singing and Leo B. Riggs presided at the piano.

Explosion Wrecks Hall at Wheatley

Wheatley, Ont., Jan. 15—(CP)—An explosion of unknown origin early today wrecked completely the two-storey Oddfellow's building in this town 10 miles east of Leamington. Early estimates placed the loss at $50,000. No one was in the building at the time.

Last night a meeting had been held in a hall on the upper floor but all had gone when the blast spread the building over the street at 1.15 o'clock.

The explosion shook nearby buildings and awakened the whole town. The building, one of the finest in the town, was of brick construction and covers an area 100 feet by 60 feet. It was owned by Wheatley I.O.O.F. Lodge 330. It was heated by natural gas.

"Whipsaw"

Dramatic Portrayal in Fast-Moving Film

The wife of "The Thin Man" becomes a G-Man's sweetheart! Myrna Loy as the voluptuous secret agent of an international ring of jewel thieves, carrying a hidden fortune in smuggled pearls.

Spencer Tracy as a government agent who tries to trap her through romantic intrigue.

It marks the union of these two vital personalities for the first time in the same picture.

It is a story of dramatic and comedic surprises, a story that moves with lightning speed and is replete with dramatic and romantic suspense.

In London rival gangs of jewel thieves mark down the purchaser of the famous Koronoff pearls. They track him across the Atlantic. On the docks at New York one gang is arrested and the other, of which Miss Loy is a member, steals the pearls. It is an international drama.

Tracy, a secret service agent, contrives to meet Miss Loy under circumstances that make him appear a criminal. Then the New York police, posing as man and Loy wife, Tracy hopes Miss Loy will lead him to the "brains" of the gang. Dexter, played by Harvey Stephens, who is in hiding, Myrna knows from the first that Tracy is an officer of the law. Thus begins the "Whipsaw."

The rival gangsters follow Myrna and Tracy, also hoping the trail will lead to Dexter. The chase goes by airplane from New York to St. Louis, where Myrna calls Dexter in New Orleans, and learns that Dexter has hidden the jewels in the handle of Myrna's dressing table mirror. Myrna and Tracy have disappeared. The gangsters wait for her to call Dexter again.

Still trying to elude their pursuers, Gwynne they have already succeeded, Myrna and Tracy leave St. Louis in the dead of night in a stolen car. A storm forces them to take shelter in a farmhouse where they find the bride and twins to a farm wife. This, plus their close association, makes each of them forget their real-life roles to a certain extent; romance begins. Myrna is mistaken for Tracy's bride.

Members of the cast selected on their merits as performers, include Harvey Stephens, who has appeared with distinction in many M-G-M features; William Harrigan, who was taken from the New York stage and sent to Hollywood especially for this picture; Robert Warwick, many times a star, and Irene Franklin, favorite of the legitimate and vaudeville stages; Lillian Leighton, Wade Boteler, Robert Glecker, Don Rowan, Gladys Gowin, John Qualen, Clay Clement and William Ingersoll are the other principal players.

NON-CHURCH-GOERS ANSWERED

The man and woman who do not go to church are a problem. Sermons attacking the stay-aways are of little value for the said persons do not hear them. But Archdeacon Gower-Rees and Rev. Leslie Dunwell of Montreal have tried a new method—a debate on churchgoing. The parts in the debate were not rehearsed.

"The church is no coward's castle", remarked the archdeacon declaring he would answer any questions which Mr. Dunwell taking the part of the non-goer might ask.

The dialogue sermon went as follows:

Rev. Mr. Dunwell asked on behalf of the absentee what good attendance accomplished. "I do not feel any better, how can I believe in this spiritual uplift talk? Is not spiritual uplift anyway a matter of auto-suggestion?" The reply was "You have a soul and the soul needs nourishment and exercise as much as your body. Going to church provides you with a change of thought, thought of spiritual things rather than earthly things. Worship in church provides part of your education, for education includes spiritual growth. Is it not a fact that this conviction of yours that going to church does you no good may also be auto-suggestion? Then what do you say to the fact that millions upon millions of people have received spiritual benefit from going to church."

As a sort of devil's advocate, Rev. Mr. Dunwell said it seemed that the present day church had no real place in life. The reply was "Let me tell you the church is still the centre of education and philanthropy. For in all these activities of today the men and women who are leaders are Christians."

The third question touched the morality of the church. It seemed out of date, urged Mr. Dunwell. Christendom is divided on many subjects and was a cause of them. Is not morality the natural outcome of civilization? Is not the church living on its past glory? The answer was that the civilization was bred in the church and of civilization is the child of the church, morality is the grandchild. Morality is a standard of life; of decency and the morality of the church is not old-fashioned. In truth it has not yet been generally accepted. Moral retrogression is usually shown by those who have been deprived of the Church.

The advocate of the non-goer claimed that clergymen were not in close enough touch with the problems of the day, and that they formed themselves into a special class. The archdeacon replied that fully eighty per cent of the Anglican clergy came from middle class and artisan homes. Every clergyman was a layman once. The archdeacon decried the fact that the clergy were sometimes depicted on the stage as irresolute effeminate men. "It is not so. We are creatures apart. That is true. We have to be a pattern for others."

The church does not practise what it preaches, put forth the advocate of the stay-aways. It was replied that the church should not be blamed for what some members do.

It was then argued that the church was a class church, and that it should make efforts to win back the workers. It was asked what contributions the church had made to peace. The answer was "The church cannot belong to any one class, either to rich or to the poor." The housing scheme in England was started by the church. "Why should the church go to the rich and say that they should not be rich. It is no sin to be rich. It is no particular virtue to be poor. Christ said that it is hard to be rich. He is for riches bring responsibility" the archdeacon added. The Church through Wilberforce fought slavery, and through Shaftsbury brought the Factory Act establishing long hours of labour for women and children. The church gave education at its own cost prior to 1870. The church gave the vision of true democracy.

"It is no one's business what to do on Sundays as long as I lead a decent life" was the next contention. The reply was that before Christianity there was life and there was decency but it is not the decency of today. That standard of decency is provided by the Church. Before the Church came there were no hospitals, alms houses. Besides a man's life is not his own business at all, one's rights being limited by the rights of others.

If the church has any solution for problems what can it do today? It was replied that the church cannot have a political program, it influences individuals and through them leavens all parties. The Church stands behind any item of legislation with clear moral value.

The plea that there is no room for churchgoing in a week of work of six days, when the services are dull, and one does not like the people, and the church does so little brought this reply—"The Church has done much and man cannot get along without it. The things that make life decent have been provided by the Church. You live in a society created by it and yet you do not want to pay your share in it. What is rest but a change? The contact with higher things in coming to church provides that change. It leaves you a better man for it. Similarly you may not like doctors and nurses. But when you are sick you need them. So also you need the church."

THERE'S A LITTLE BIT OF BAD IN THE BEST OF US, and a little bit of good in the worst of us, according to a philosopher who knew his humanity. Hence why should folks be surprised when Herr Hitler, does something which seems commendable? Herr Hitler, Dictator of Germany, has banned radio advertising in his country. In view of the extravagance to which radio advertising has degenerated with overstatement and the truth fearfully macerated few will blame Herr Hitler, if conditions are anywhere near as bad over there. Recent investigations by the United States Government reveals the fact that the greater part of radio advertising looked into so far has been false and misleading. Newspaper advertising has to be same and truthful for it is put down in black and white for all men to see, and is not like the boastful words which are thrown carelessly on the air to be remembered for a moment and then forgotten in the rush of other things more worth while, having no record to check with truth or falsity.

UNITED STATES MOVIE FANS, meaning the folks who lay their money on the line at the box office, voted by a large majority that "David Copperfield" was the best picture of the year. Just as other victory for British authorship. The Association of Moving Picture Critics, professionals, decided that "The Informer" was the best picture play of the year. The locale of this story is in Ireland. Other picture plays of British origin or British inspiration were big hits. On the legitimate stage diminutive Helen Hayes increased her stature by depicting Queen Victoria in "Victoria Regina" which is breaking all box office records on Broadway and at the Washington premiere packed the Presidential box, resulting in an invitation to the White House for Helen Hayes. "Libel" a British play, authored and produced over there, has also made a big hit in the United States. And so, the British threat to Hollywood grows stronger as the Yankees go British in a big Way.

CHANGE MADE IN LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE RATES

Dealing with the important changes effective today in Long Distance telephone rates as announced in this issue, Manager F. W. Proctor, of the Bell Telephone Company says:

"For the fifth time within the past seven years, we are introducing some changes in our long distance rate schedules which we believe will prove of great benefit to users of the service.

"The two outstanding features of the latest revision are Night Rates on Person-to-Person calls, which have never hitherto been available to any discount; and week-end rates on Station-to-Station and Person-to-Person messages which will be available all day Sunday.

"These two important changes, we feel, will be welcomed by our patrons who, by reflection of the service, can effect some worthwhile savings. From our standpoint we hope that increased use of our long distance lines by both old and new patrons will tend to offset the revenue losses from the extension of the discount periods.

"On some of the shorter haul routes, where the night discounts have not built up an adequate volume of calls in off-peak hours, these night discounts have been reduced by 5 or 10 cents, but these changes will be more than offset by the benefits of Person-to-Person night calls on longer-haul routes created by the week-end discounts on both "station" and person-to-person calls."

Mayor Cory Asks Co-Operation In Handling Town Affairs

Trenton Town Council Inaugurated for Ensuing Year

Trenton, Jan. 13 (Special)—The Trenton Mayor and Council for 1936 were inaugurated Monday morning in the Town Hall. Declaration of office was given to the six council-lor in order of merit, according to votes, Mayor N. R. Cory to assume the same position which he held last year as Chairman of the Relief Board. Aldermen Fleming, Hugh, O'Connor, Chairman of Streets and Sidewalks, Ernie Ellis, Chairman of Harbor and Public Works, Roy Wright, Chairman of Fire, Market and Police, George Riley, Chairman of Printing and By-laws, Ross Burtt, Chairman of Court of Revision, Dr. Lee LaFleur, Board member of the council will act on all committees except the Court of Revision, which Mr. Ellis has dropped out. After the inauguration Mr. Cory gave his inaugural speech. The following is Mr. Cory's speech.

Gentlemen:

May I at the outset extend to the last year's members of the council my congratulations on their re-election and to the new members may I say, that I welcome you to your positions on the council. The electorate has placed confidence in you and your ability, to assist in handling the affairs of this municipality for 1936 and I sincerely hope, that this confidence will not have been misplaced and that we will all work together during 1936 as this year may be a better year for our people than 1935.

Trenton's affairs have improved during the last two years but we are far from every over the top and the handling of affairs during the coming year will be a long way toward making or marring the future and while this is my last year I appeal to you today for harmony and co-operation during 1936.

The tax rate of the Town of Trenton at the end of 1934 was $19,726.91 while at the end of 1935 the total reached to $851,245.36 a reduction of $94,481.55 and during the present year I expect that our re-funding plan which is before the government will be favorably dealt with thereby easing the load for the tax-payers.

Town Financially Sound

Financially the Town is sound having a net working capital of better than $100 dollars after all our debts are paid.

Relief for the fifteen peak ye, naving at this time 468 heads of families dependent on the municipality for support, but the opening of some of our present industries and the building of new, and certain other improving work conditions, which will take place in the near future will go a long way toward remedying this condition and it is my hope, that before many months have passed that relief in Trenton will be at a minimum and that local conditions will so improve during the year, that the Canadian Company of our citizens will find work.

Schools last year co-operated with us in keeping up their maintenance costs at a minimum and as a consequence they were paid in full and the same policy will remain in effect during 1936 providing we receive the same co-operation, that was given in 1935.

Tax Delinquents

Tax collections for 1935 were some $15,000 below 1934. It is my belief that certain citizens, who could have paid their 1935 taxes did not do so and I am recommending to the council, that a special collector be employed for a short time, in order to collect these delinquent taxes using whatever means are necessary to accomplish this.

Citizens are being given a discount on their 1936 taxes if their prepayment receipts which can be obtained from the treasurer and in the large number will take advantage of this opportunity of saving money for themselves, and also assisting their town to finance, for they certainly cannot expect 1936 will see a lightening of the taxes for the purpose and I also from the citizens their hearty hearted co-operation and best wishes for the year, who will serve them during the year that by all working together we may have a real live-third stepping stone a brighter and more prosperous future.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating breakfist and me was looking at the movie ears before pop had a chance to take the paper away with him, saying, it says here that Ronnie Reminisky new picture isn't going to be called Last for Love after all. It seems they were afraid the senzors mite object so they're naming it Furry First, she said.

My parents were going to name me Lucretia after my grandmother but Wilbur for the same reason, pop said. Would you mind pointing out what bout of lollypops so I can help myself to one? he said, and she said, What lollypops for land sakes?

Some people call them cigars but I call them on the safe side in case some members of the anty tobacco league is looking in the store window, pop said. For the same reason I understand there's a movement on foot among confirmed type smokers to refer to their cigarettes as playing the mouth organ, and no tobacco chewer will admit he chews tobacco any more. He'll tell you he's going to take his back teeth for a little ways, pop said.

How you eggsagerate, ma said, and pop said, On the contrary my deer, I haven't told you the half of it.

And he quick put his hand over his mouth saying, For a minute, I hasn't I was going to bust into flower. In the old days I would of said sneeze but these are the new days and you never know when there's a porn investigator at your elbow, he said.

Now Wilbyun there's a time and a time for everything, and that's enough, ma said, and pop said, Well, just pluck me another bouket of buttercups and I'll shove off for the office.

If you mean a cup of coffee you'll say so in this house, ma said, and pop said, Well, I'll take a chance on spelling it in a low voice, C. O. dubbie F dubbie E, pesah.

And he drank it and folded up his paper and left.

IMPORTANT CHANGES
— in —
Long Distance TELEPHONE RATES

To-day, Wednesday, January 15th, the following important changes in Long Distance Telephone Rates become effective:

NIGHT RATES on "Person-to-Person" Calls

Calls to a particular person are now available (on all but short-haul messages) at reduced rates after 7 p.m. Hitherto, discounts have been made at night only on "Anyone" (station-to-station) calls. The discounts on most "Person-to-Person" night calls are the same in money as on "Anyone" calls.

WEEK-END RATES

Night rates will apply all day Sunday on both "Person-to-Person" and "Anyone" calls. This means that the lowest rates for either "Anyone" or "Person-to-Person" calls are available continuously from 7 p.m. Saturday to 4.30 a.m. Monday.

NIGHT RATES on "Anyone" Calls

To points where the Day "Anyone" rate is 80 cents or less, the discounts for Night calls are reduced or discontinued. That is, some of the present 25- and 30-cent Night rates are increased by 5 or 10 cents. These discount inducements to call while the tide of traffic is lower are replaced by the more attractive Night "Person-to-Person" and Week-end reductions.

Note some examples of these Rate changes:

"PERSON-TO-PERSON" CALLS			"ANYONE" CALLS
Former Rate Any Time	New Rate Night and Week-end	BELLEVILLE to:	New Rate Night and Week-end	Former Rate Night
$ .55	$ .55	PETERBORO	$ .45	$ .35*	$ .30
1.00	.70	TORONTO	.70	.60	.40
1.15	.85	HAMILTON	.90	.50	.50
1.75	1.05	LONDON	1.40	.70	.70
2.40	1.45	WINDSOR	1.90	.95	.95
1.70	1.05	MONTREAL	1.35	.70	.70
1.00	.70	OTTAWA	.70	.40	.40
2.75	1.65	QUEBEC	2.20	1.10	1.10
1.45	.90	NORTH BAY	1.15	.60	.50
4.75	3.00	WINNIPEG	3.75	2.00	2.00

*An example of Night Rate increases which occur in a few cases.

This is the fifth important revision of Long Distance telephone rates within the past seven years. In both social and business affairs the new Week-end and Night rates offer you a broader service at a lower cost.

Fashion Flashes

(Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

A GOOD LOOK at the merchandise displayed at your favorite shop will disclose several pleated frocks for both day and evening. A nice example is the black satin chalk crepe with high, draped neck, yoke and sleeves cut in one. The front consists of four tiers of softly draped fabric, reaching from the bustline to the hem.

YOUR LUCKY STAR may well be an exquisite frock of metallic cloth in an exquisite star sapphire shade of blue. It is made with a slightly deep V in front and narrow shoulder straps. Rhinestone and sapphires are in the clips at the shoulder line and also in the belt buckle.

JUST ONE evening frock for the season means a model that will form a perfect background for different accessories. Such a frock is a black crepe with the floating sleeves made popular by Lanvin. The low V decolletage is finished with a clip, the skirt is full in front and there is a self girdle.

A GOOD BET in the evening field is a full-length wrap of white velvet with voluminous sleeves, huge collar of bellvisky and wide rippled revers.

Miss Ella Taylor, R.N., Belleville, was given the freedom for her hospitality. A bounteous lunch was served by hostess and committee.

Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain were called to the platform and an address was read by Miss Margaret-Ann Alexander, while two little flower maidens carried in four dainty decorated baskets filled with gifts, with Miss Gena French as the bridal maid, and Gregory Pow as the jolly good fellow. Mrs. Chamberlain thanked the friends and neighbors for their kindness and presents and invited all to visit them in their home at Pleasant Bay. Musical numbers were served and music and dancing were enjoyed.

Rows Hinder A Child's Sleep

Hour Before Retiring Should Be Devoid of Upsets, Says Writer

By LISA GRENELLE

EVERY WRITER knows when the clock struck eight, mother put on his paternal scowl, mother put on her scolding voice, and Benny drew his mouth down in the sullen defiance of bedtime.

Like all children, Benny was inclined to resent bedtime on general principles. But father's and mother's attitude betrayed a bitterness resentment until it became hot, pre-meditated rebellion. Benny didn't want to go to bed and he wouldn't go to bed. Why did he have to?

The usual scene followed, often consisting of kicks, tears and a spanking, or, at best, threats and scoldings. Benny was as stubborn as Job's turkey.

But to bed he went. His conscientious and determined parents saw to that. Sleep, however, was not so easy. You can put a child to bed by force, but sleep must be wooed. No parent can make his child sleep, or even truly relax.

Couldn't Relax

And Benny, of course, after the battle, couldn't relax. Not anything but sleepy. Angry and upset, he tossed and fretted. Instead, he waited until his parents were out of earshot, then got up and crept about in the dark, or sometimes lay awake in his bed. Finally, when he became tired and exhausted, and wanted to sleep, he couldn't.

We all know how depressing and irritating a sleepless night is. It is difficult it is to sleep when we are tired, exhausted, but it is worse to sense that children always sleep like logs, and never lie awake unless they are ailing.

It's not true. Perfectly healthy children frequently get sleepy at such clocks when they find it hard to go to bed. It is in many cases, why they make a scene, and why they act. They dread, as we all do, lying awake, tossing about in the dark.

What, then, should be done? Let them stay up?

Don't Make Conflict

I think not, except occasionally, as a treat. But if they are kept up late, even for one night, he will find it hard to settle down early the next. Early to bed, early to rise, applies at the same hour, is essential to health, to beauty, to good humor.

But there must be no row before bed. Mother must be there without hurry or fuss. A hot bath, a story, a little reading aloud, will help the child to relax and forget about bed, if not something to which to look forward, at least not something to dread.

Then it relaxes discipline and delays things, however, don't make a conflict of it. Anger acts always as a stimulant, and to relaxation impossible; it puts off sleep.

HEALTH and PSYCHOLOGY

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.

Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Many people awaken each morning feeling ill at ease, irritable, sour and sore at the world in general. I am sure you know what I mean. It is the familiar morning grouch. Mrs. Bisch is physically the chief offenders in this respect. They are more irascible than women, being more given to having their own way and not wanting to be interfered with. When my confessional complaining that their husbands regularly get out on the wrong side of the bed in the morning.

There are two causes for the morning grouch, the physical and the other is mental. There are cases where both are operative.

On the physical side one must consider first of all sluggish bowels. If the digestive organs are not functioning at their best, there is an accumulation of undigested food matter which decomposes, forms toxins, and poisons the nerve cells. Nerves, remember, are the seat of all heaviness, even pressure sensations. When we are conscious of them not seem clear. Thinking is sluggish and hazy. All of which, of course, makes a person angry with himself.

Curiously enough, sufficient feelings may be heavy and dull, with no desire to sleep or by too little sleep. Sleep which is too heavy and too profound. Sleep is produced by the presence of the blood mass which act like a narcotic poison. Too little sleep will sleep leave the nerves keyed up.

On the mental side, we find, in the morning grouch, a protest against having to get up and face the day of life. Observe, for instance, how restless people are who are unhappy in trouble or having some specially disagreeable problem to face during the day.

People often oversleep under such circumstances. Sometimes the alarm clock, no matter how noisy it may be, fails to rouse them. The mind, you see, is protecting them or, rather, is protecting itself. Few people relish the routine of life, the work of the day.

We like to protect ourselves against the unpleasant experience and we suspect the day holds in store for us. We, therefore, try to help out — and succeeds — by making us sleepy, or unable to get out of bed.

When wrapped in the arms of Morpheus, we are lulled into a sense of protection and security.—Care-free, happy thoughts, dreams of joy-ous woes". This feeling of safety that the unconscious mind really go back to the days before we were actually born.

We don't know just when the mind reaches this stage, but it is likely that it is active for a period even before birth. Even in our uterine existence, we may have gotten the notion that sleep, security and protection were synonymous and pressed identical states of well-being.

And babies, how they love to sleep! And is it not true that many of us are babyish in other ways besides desire for sleep?

The morning grouch may have its origin in childhood days, from which, however may be overcome. The correction for the physical causes is obvious. The correction for mental requires only a realization of fundamentals truths.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

Overweight persons who like beer need not avoid its use, but should consider it a food with a fairly high caloric value. Substitute a light beer and not gain in weight all you want to. Beer is a valuable daily food intake, especially the carbohydrates (starches and sugars.)

PAINT TIME is here and a good choice for the room is green. Use a model in white metallaise shot with green. Make the bandeau front draped and there is a girdle of green and turquoise beads at the waistline. Add beads and turquoise also setting the halter straps.

Good Manners

AT THE DANCE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When introducing a gentleman and lady to another couple, how should the introduction be made?

2. When a gentleman wishes a lady to dance with him, what should he say?

3. If the lady cares to dance with him, what does she say?

4. When the dance is over, what should he say? And what should she say?

Anxious.

1. When you are introducing two couples to each other, first introduce the ladies. Mrs. Bradley, Mrs. Brown". Then, "Mrs. Bradley may I present Mr. Brown", and "Mrs. Brown, may I present Mr. Bradley". And then, " and Mr. Bradley, Mr. Brown." If one woman is appreciably older than the other, mention first the name of the older woman, and use the same sequence of age when you are introducing the men to each other. Remember not to introduce a couple as "Mr. and Mrs. Bradley" — individual introductions should be made.

2. The man says, "May I have this dance?" or "Would you like to dance?", or "Will you dance?"

3. "Yes, thank you", or "I'd love to dance."

4. When the dance is over, the man should say, "Thank you for the dance. Thank you," or "Thank you for that dance." And the girl doesn't thank the man, but says, "I've had a pleasant thing that indicates that she too has enjoyed the dance. "It was delightful", or "I enjoyed it so much", or "I so much enjoy dancing with you, that dance."

DINNER JACKET

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is the white dinner jacket worn with a Tuxedo at any time?

Jay.

No, a white tie is never worn with a Tuxedo suit. A white evening tie is a formal tie and is therefore appropriate only with formal evening clothes, the tail-coat. A black evening tie is an informal tie and is worn, therefore, with informal evening attire, the dinner jacket, Tuxedo suit. But a white waistcoat is sometimes worn, and correctly, with a Tuxedo suit.

LETTER-WRITING

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please tell me whether or not it is correct to use green ink? Is it proper to print the address on an envelope?

Thank you.

The best social form demands that we use either black or dark blue ink. Dark blue ink does give a more distinct appearance to our letters. The one exception to this rule is when writing of Christmas greetings on red ink — this can give a very gala air to your Christmas greetings. If we are uncertain about the spelling of a letter we may write or print a return address on the back of the envelope.

RECEIVING LINE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you kindly tell me the correct procedure for going through a receiving line at a dinner dance held

ASTHMA and Chronic Bronchitis
"I suffered terribly for 2 years; would choke on it and lose sleep. Now I get a $1 bottle and it is gone for a month." — Mrs. J. H. Bass, McLennan, Alta.
THE GENUINE TEMPLETON'S RAZ-MAH
in a hotel? I know most of the members in the receiving line (about twelve) but my escort has not met any of them. What would be the appropriate thing to say on such an occasion?

M.

You would, of course, precede your escort at the "Go down the receiving-line. First you would greet a member of the receiving-line, then you know her, you say, "Good evening, Mrs. Allen, May I present Mr. Bradley?" If you don't know her, you first introduce yourself — "I am Mary Hollis". Then the patroness introduces herself as she shakes hands with you, and then you introduce your escort to her. There probably won't be much more than time to make the introductions, since you mustn't hold up the receiving-line. But if there is a short wait, it would be natural for you to make some pleasant comment about the dance. "Isn't this a delightful party? It is such a pleasure to be here."

8,000 PERSONS WILL PAY 90 P.C.

New Provincial Tax is Explained by Premier

Toronto, Jan. 15 (CP)—From 80 to 90 per cent of Ontario's new income tax will be paid by about 8,000 people, Premier Hepburn, Cobalt estimated today. An unofficial survey had shown about 100,000 residents of the province were liable to taxation.

The new tax will be introduced in the legislature next week and will supplant the existing municipal income tax.

Mr. Croll said municipalities which collect their own income taxes would receive from the government an amount equal to the tax they received in 1935. As many could base their assessment the government is taking under consideration, the minister said, a means of making up the additional income municipalities have been received for this year.

"13th Bill" Suggested.

A plan much like the Provincial Income Corporations Act bill where by Hydro municipalities receive additional payments from the province might be suggested, the minister said.

Referring particularly to Toronto, Mr. Croll said the Hydro electric power would not be diminished by the loss of the income tax revenue Toronto operates under a special act of the legislature, giving it power to impose income taxes at present. Necessary amendments will be given, the minister said, to take care of revenue through the income tax.

The minister pointed to the assessment bill which would apply to the province as a "saving of overhead to municipalities" and no longer will need the department formerly charged with collection of the tax, Mr. Croll said, the municipalities could have more time now to strike their assessment for taxing purposes.

The tax money will be paid over to municipalities once or twice a year by the province. Mr. Croll explained that the government's policy toward municipalities which collected their own income tax.

No Exodus Expected.

Possibility of an exodus of wealthy Ontario residents to avoid the province's personal income tax was scouted by Mr. Croll but at the same time he declared Ontario was one who would leave "to avoid a just share of taxes" as "good riddance." Florida, Cuba and California residents to depart from the state boundaries of Ontario taxation, Mr. Croll declared "You didn't see Californians cry when they left Ontario (W. R. Brock, the publisher) left."

Mr. Croll thought the strength of the income tax which will be brought down at the session of the legislature opening next week by it is being administered by federal fiscal officials rather than by municipalities. "That is a consideration of thought."

The tax will be collected by the federal government along with the Investments

Dominion income tax and Ontario's share then will be handed over to the province.

"The Dominion tax is a fair tax, this is a fair tax," he said. "If your neighbor pays on the same and leads us you pay, there is no complaint."

EXPECT GOVERNOR GRANT REPRIEVE

Trenton, Jan. 15—Bruno Hauptmann's lawyers sought an eleventh-hour reprieve today to snatch the man convicted as the Lindbergh baby slayer from the electric chair.

There were definite indications, one of them said, a reprieve would be forthcoming before 8 p.m. Friday.

Earlier the Attorney General David T. Wilentz said he was "reasonably informed" the Governor would grant a reprieve.

The Governor, except for a brief statement three days ago in which he said he possessed "plenty of investigation," for a month has declined all comment on the Hauptmann case which drew to another of its high climaxes in Federal Circuit Court here late yesterday.

Hauptmann asked a writ of Habeas Corpus, 44-year-old Judge Warren J. Davis refused it. Hauptmann's attorney then announced this decision.

"This decision by Judge Davis is the end."

Said Neil Burkinshaw, Washington lawyer, who argued the Hauptmann appeal in the Circuit Court of Appeals.

"The only possibility in the way now is the United States Supreme Court."

C. Lloyd Fisher, chief counsel, was more hopeful in his comment but was vague as to what further steps he would take.

"There are several possibilities," he said.

THOMPSON FAILED TO IDENTIFY WIFE

Toronto, Jan. 15 (CP)—Although he is twice viewed the remains of his wife at the morgue Joseph Thompson on failed to identify the body as that of Vida Thompson, chief coroner Crawford testified today at the third day of Thompson's trial on a charge of murdering his wife.

The body of the 29-year-old woman was found in a ditch on May 19, 1934. Thompson was previously held and the jury impanelled.

Thompson went to the morgue twice July 29, accompanied by Sam Slater, his friend. The first time on his first visit thought he knew her but Thompson did not, the coroner stated.

On the second visit Sutter asked Dr. Crawford if he could feel the lobe of the ears of the dead woman to find out if the pierced holes there had in each ear were there. We found them and also spoke of a cast on the face and back. There were marks where these had been removed, the coroner said.

"I asked Thompson then if that was the body of his wife and he made no reply whatever," said Dr. Crawford.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied by Biggar and Crawford by Financial Service.

Buffalo-Ankerite to Merge With Marbum—Mineland Limited Sale or Marbum Gold Mines to its neighbor, Buffalo Ankerite Gold Mines, on the basis of one Buffalo Ankerite share for 6 shares of Marbum, is tentatively approved by united shareholders of both companies. Marbum shareholders are called to a special meeting at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, at 3 p.m. January 22nd, to consider, and if agreeable, to ratify the sale.

A synopsis of the independent engineering report made by D. G. H. Wright and R. W. Brymbank outlines the position of the two mines as to ore reserves, potential ore, plants, etc., and their findings are the basis of the merger. The engineers conclude that "it is evident that these two properties should be amalgamated, and recommend the approval of the deal as put forward by shareholders.

In discussing the geological features of the two mines the engineers say that there is evidence of a structural junction at depth of the main ore zones of the two properties which they regard as "favorable for the localization of a productive area of importance", and intimate the possibility is that this structural junction lies on claim No. 82 Ankerite and Claim M.R. 523 Marbum and will be encountered at 1500 and 2000 feet.

On the question of ore reserves the engineers point out that in the case of Marbum there has been little development work ahead of present requirements. However, they believe the Marbum ore zone will produce in the future above the 1000 feet level as it has already been produced, namely, $1,000,000 and this with the broken and positive ore reserves above the total for Marbum of $1,110,320 against a total ore reserve of Ankerite ore to the same horizon of $3,841,818 (gold at $35.00). The situation as present favours Ankerite.

Several factors that indicate the advisability of the merger are brought up by the engineers. One is the immediate necessity of a secondary source of power for the Ankerite mine. This would be provided through power from the Marbum.

Another is the extra milling tonnage that would be available by handling Marbum ore. The plant to its rated capacity of 300 tons daily, assuming the total 1936 ore tonnage in excess of 700 tons daily.

The authorized capitalization of both companies is 1,000,000 shares. Buffalo Ankerite 102,000 shares which would reduce to 123,472 the number of shares that would require to pay for Marbum assets. Buffalo Ankerite would then have 701,679 shares issued.

Sullivan Cons. Mines Ltd.—Obtains D.D. Indications of New Ore Shoot

Financial Service is officially informed that the management at the Sullivan Consolidated Mines Ltd., have obtained encouraging and encouraging results. Activity and strength in the shares is no doubt a reflection of these developments.

Diamond drilling done from both the third and the second levels has indicated the possibilities of a new vein, west of the "A" vein. Two holes were drilled from the third level at an angle to the south and west of the "A" vein, good to high-grade ore was cut at 200 feet.

Two holes were then drilled at the same angle to the south and west of the same values and same satisfactory results.

These developments give promise that a new important vein may be lying at a short distance to the west of "A" vein and parallel to that and other veins in the Sullivan. Additional encouraging information has also been obtained in the new "south-west" section.

Hudson Patricia Ontario Finances—Two New Issues Underwritten by Board

At a special meeting held in Montreal yesterday two new directors were elected to the Board namely, Colin Campbell M.P., and A. J. H. St. Denis of Montreal. The Directors also declared a dividend on the shipment of the 50-ton mill to the property.

Hudson-Patricia is amply financed to carry through its mine production stage. The cost of milling operations will be greatly reduced by the use of electric power from a power line constructed this winter on a distance of 20 miles, a contract has just been reached by the Ontario Hydro-Commission to furnish the necessary power for the mine until the new unit is achieved at Big Pine.

Manitoba & Eastern Negotiating For Sale

Canadiens and Boston Bruins Move Out of Cellar in Their Respective Divisions by Wins

Habitants Defeat Amerks And Bruins Down The Leafs

RANGERS WIN

With Weakened Lineup Take Maroons Right in Montreal

By A. E. FULFORD

Stepping out of the darkness after such long cellar stays their underground, perches seemed like home, Boston Bruins and Montreal Canadiens blinked today at the season's most closely-knit National Hockey League set-up—a tight race that is largely in their making.

Canadiens, flying Frenchmen again long after everyone thought they had lost their right to the lad, and the still bruising Bruins both knocked off important opponents last night and earned enough points to take them into third places in their divisions.

Their emergence from cellar positions, throwing New York Americans' demotion to the fourth spot in the American section, consolidated the uncertainty of the present battle for play-off positions.

The Sunday game last week-end when Toronto Leafs lost top place in the race was another for the first time in three years. Now the teams are so closely packed there is no telling which pair will be dropped next spring when the rest go into the Stanley Cup series.

The Habitant win was their third straight and their fourth in two weeks. They got it on a freak goal and then threw up a defense the New Yorkers could not penetrate.

After Joe Pusie and Al Pepper had advanced the puck, Joliat flipped it toward the goal and it dropped, at before it, to Alex Connell. Voyageur threw out his padded leg to stop it. He had moved, too soon and with legs spread wide watched it move slowly across the line.

Leads Boy For Rookie.

Toronto's defeat was their fourth in five games. Since Dec. 26, when they defeated Canadiens 3-0, they have done better than a goal a game, 22 in one engagement and tonight missed an opportunity of moving back into the lead.

Goals by Cooney Weiland and Pit Clapper in the third and second periods gave Bruins a lead Leafs could not overcome though Hap Roll tied Biz Thomas counted one in the second. When they opened up their defense for gaily attacks in the third Babe Siebert broke away for two counters. A crowd of 12,000 saw the game, only 180 less than the all-time record at the Gardens.

Tiny Thompson, Bruin goalie, passed out to Siebert, parted near the blue line, the latter skated down first counter and was credited with an assist by the scorers. It was believed to be the first time a goalie has been given credit in the scoring lists on the play.

Without Bun Cook, Vernon Ayres and Harold Starr and Cooney still thirteen men, Rangers still were too good for Maroons. They gave Bill Beveridge only 19 shots to score compared to the 39 Dave Kerr handled but had a very tough time in the second period.

Earl Robertson gave Maroons a goal lead in the third minute of the game after taking a long pass from Dave Trottier. In the 13th minute Keeling worked a neat play with Frank Boucher and Glen Brydson for the equalizer and later Cecil Dillon caught the Habitants in the Ranger defence area and streaked through for a goal.

HOCKEY SLOGHTS

By RAY COLLETT

Major Frederic McLaughlin, who owns the Chicago Blackhawks, bought himself an extra team when he went into hockey and from the looks of players from Saskatoon which he acquired, only nobody in Gotlieb is now with the Hawks should Coach Tommy Gorman and Manager Leo Dandurand, defecting from the original purchase price, some old arguments which McLaughlin got for other hockey brays. Johnny is worth every cent he costs.

The brilliant, black-haired wisp of a boy born in Russia, probably the only player in the National League to emerge from that land. He is at the light of day near Odessa but when Canada gave him the hockey love which has made him a success.

A slick-handling star is Gottselig, one of the fanciest puck carriers in the business and it's a real treat to watch him weave through on a brilliant solo rush, or wind back and forth in a defensive role. His pattern in killing off time during a penalty. Trying to get him to take chasing a will-o'-the-wisp. To Herb Gardiner goes much of the credit for his solidarity. Gardiner managed Hawks for a season and taught them much of his strategy. Along with his ability weaving style and smart combination play, the crack Hawk team was a hard-hitting, end-on shot at the nets. It carried him to the upper echelon of coaches. This year injuries blocked his early season work.

DUKE'S DEFENCE CUT TO RIBBONS

Hamilton Scores 4-0 Shutout And Moves Closer to Top

(By the Canadian Press)

The board jockeying behind Toronto's proud Dukes, picked by certain experts to wade through Canada's amateur hockey array to capture the Allan Cup, took time out today to figure ways to strengthen a wobbly defence. Its weak was the Duke's rearguard in Hamilton last night that Tigers cut through to score a 4-0 win to mark up a 4-0 win.

Playing their first Senior Ontario Hockey Association game since "Pud" Glackmeyer, former defence man, joined Canada's Olympic squad, the Dukes were not impressive as their lead in the Eastern Section of the League was reduced to a single point over Tigers. The Toronto team still held a big advantage, however, with four games in hand.

In the other game of the night, Oakville Villans, the only other team to upset the Dukes this season, strengthened their hold on third standing in the Eastern Section by downing the Star-chasing Varsity of Toronto squad 4-1. Saral Allan led the Villans scoring two of their goals, with Pearcy Allan and Bert Pengelly getting the others.

It was a wide-open contest as the Tigers upset the Dukes and after a series of petty offence, the teams joined in a free-for-all in the final session. Art Jackson and Howard Mackie drawing major penalties for their parts in the feud.

SCHOOL LEAGUE OPENS TONIGHT

Four Teams Will Pry Off The Lid at The Arena

With decks cleared and a strenuous period of pre-season training behind them, the teams composing the Belleville senior interscholastic group of the C.O.S.S.A. swing into action tonight at the arena with a double-header of school hockey. During the autumn season football spunds from St. Michael's Academy, the Ontario School for the Deaf, Albert College and the R.C.I.V.S. were grouped together in a splendid rugby football group that attracted large crowds. Continuing their athletic activities these four schools recently formed an interscholastic hockey group that should prove even more interesting and supply better competition than did football enjoy. The group schedule was drafted yesterday and finds interscholastic hockey making away at the Belleville Arena every Wednesday night from the opening games tonight until Feb. 19 when the schedule ends.

One new entry in interscholastic hockey circles is noted this year when Coach Eddie Schrieder consented to join the ranks of the senior group with his "Irish" team from St. Michael's Academy. Previously Albert College and the O.S.D. have at some time or other been affiliated with the Bay of Quinte group in O.C.S.S.A. hockey circles, the decision of the "Irish" squad gives the local loop a well-balanced four team group. Heading the group "dope" with local hockey fans who in season-ne past have stamped their approval on interscholastic hockey in Belleville, Coach Lester Shiels of last year's group Ontario Champs and the talk or rebuilding his squad this year while Coach Frank Cunningham, Mr. Ed. Ellis, the R.I.V.S. juvenile city champions of 1935 plus a number of Collett and Seymour Shiels to throw into competition. The mystery team of the loop is Coach Wm. Brock's Albert College team which it is understood boasts of considerable hockey talent in Toronto, Jodes and Cloose. Coach Hendley of Coach Schrieder's green and white clad "Irish" is also an unknown quantity as yet, but in previous past R.C.I. squads have always could be counted upon to produce some fine class performers thus leading the sponsors to believe that the 1936 edition of the local C.O.S.S.A. group will be the best school hockey league ever operated in Belleville.

Referee Harold "Bouncer" Holway, Belleville veteran and popular referee, has been engaged to officiate at the opening twin bill in the new interscholastic hockey loop.

The 1936 schedule for the Bay of Quinte section of the C.O.S.S.A. follows, all dates being Wednesday nights:

Jan. 15—Albert College vs. R.C.I.V.S.
St. Michael's vs. O.S.D.

DETROIT MAKES A SLIGHT GAIN

Only Team in International to Chalk up Victory

(By the Canadian Press)

Only one team in the International Hockey League today could claim any advantage as a result of the week-end games and that was Canada's amateur hockey array to capture the Allan Cup, next time out today to figure ways to strengthen a wobbly defence. Its weak was the Duke's rearguard in Hamilton last night that Tigers cut through to score a 4-0 win to mark up a 4-0 win.

Playing their first Senior Ontario Hockey Association game since "Pud" Glackmeyer, former defence man, joined Canada's Olympic squad, the Dukes were not impressive as their lead in the Eastern Section of the League was reduced to a single point over Tigers. The Toronto team still held a big advantage, however, with four games in hand.

In the other game of the night, Oakville Villans, the only other team to upset the Dukes this season, strengthened their hold on third standing in the Eastern Section by downing the Star-chasing Varsity of Toronto squad 4-1. Saral Allan led the Villans scoring two of their goals, with Pearcy Allan and Bert Pengelly getting the others.

It was a wide-open contest as the Tigers upset the Dukes and after a series of petty offence, the teams joined in a free-for-all in the final session. Art Jackson and Howard Mackie drawing major penalties for their parts in the feud.

QUEENS LOSE TO MAGEDOMAS 8-2

Game at Kingston Marked by Fights And Many Penalties

Kingston, Jan. 15 (CP)—Brockville Magedomas scored thirds eighth straight victory in the Ottawa Senior Hockey League here last night when they defeated Queen's University, 8 to 2, in a wild battle marked by fights and a total of nineteen penalties.

The score did not indicate the difference in the teams, for Brockville scored almost all their goals while Queen's were short-handed, the Tricolor having only three men on the ice when Magedomas rallied three goals.

It was in the last period that the rough-house tactics started, Patterson and Dowler getting five minutes for their slugging, and in the last few minutes the same two players went at it hammer and tongs, Stollery and McMahon tangled in a gigantic fistic battle, and Frank McMahon sporting several cuts on his forehead. To add to the confusion, Wing got in a jam with Gosker Tice, and drew five minutes for the slugging.

Queen's outplayed Brockville at the start, and Cowley tallied the first goal in eight minutes, but McMahon and Nichol soon had them back with counters and Coleman made it 3 to 1 near the end of the period. McMahon's second counter, which was matched by Patterson, and in the last twenty minutes Brockville ran away from the Tricolor with four goals, three more than Queen's had two men on the fence. The bright feature of the game was the brilliant goal-tending of Ell Gowsell, who made 53 saves to 27 for Queen's.

In the last period Gowsell had 22 saves, and almost all were sensational.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

A late press dispatch today states that the Belleville at Queen's junior O.H.A. game scheduled to be played in the rink Harry Ainley is now owning has been indefinitely postponed. The reason for the postponement was given as due to the staging of a senior game between Queen's University and the Ottawa Emeralds in an Ottawa Senior City League game. This unfortunate postponement leaves the local junior "Redmen" without a game from Jan. 4th until their regular scheduled game of Jan. 21st, when the Ontario Junior Group will come to town. Doubtlessly Manager Thomas will endeavor to have Gunsells' game played later in the next week, as the local kids are in dire need of competition.

Tonight is the long waited for evening locally, the evening that sees the official opening of hockey in Belleville. Due to other postponements and owning to severe weather conditions the opening match of the senior interscholastic group of hockey between the first and last of the current hockey season in Belleville tonight which is the first of the series to go with the winning of the local senior interscholastic group are two fold; first and foremost the city senior school title will be awarded to the champions, while paramountly facing the four teams is the right to continue into the C. O. S. S. A. group or else eventually the provincial interscholastic title is the final goal that can be arrived at. With these honors confronting the starters tonight, locally every squad will be out to battle to the bitter end. In years past interscholastic hockey has always been "tops" in Belleville and with four teams in competition tonight there should be no exception to the rule. The trimcolor from the B.C.I. meet the stingy green and white of the local opening game while in the second tilt the boys from the O.S.D. clash with St. Michael's.

Right on the heels of tonight's opening comes the Industrial League puckaters saving action for another row night with three games scheduled, all six teams comprising the league appearing in contest. Then on Friday night comes the "big event". Manager Eddie Thomas is holding nightly practices for intermediates in hopes of gaining sweet revenge over Orie Peters for that second period defeat suffered in the Littlock City last Friday night. According to stories related by the "Red-clad" team of locals, the Peterboro down-shirt lucky to win at home but with a fast sheet of ice on Friday night a far different story may be told. The locals were boasting of the fact they kept their extra practice ice in fine shape for some sheet last week and although the Wright-managed aggregation carried some highly touted imports the locals demonstrated they are to be reckoned with as the final curtain is rung down. When Peterboro and Belleville hockey teams meet there is always action promised, so Friday night's tilt will be looked for my many.

"We have received numerous telephoning calls regarding the question of whether public skating is allowed on our rink as the Belleville harbor. You can assure all skaters in Belleville, that our rink is open for public skating free at any time. We have flooded the skating surface and erected lights on our club house. Recently these lights have been attached to our radio and erected outside to supply music for the skaters," stated President Maurice Callaghan of the Belleville Yacht and Athletic Club today. What the Yacht Club would like, however, is to have the use of some interested service club erect a flood light on Victoria Park side of the skating rink on the harbor. The rink is situated directly in the Belleville Yacht Club's club room and is handicapped to a degree enough to accommodate two or three hundred skaters. The skating public is permitted to change their shoes in the club house in the men's cloak rooms, which also is a free gesture on the part of the B.Y. and A. C.

We know of no sporting organization in Belleville that supplies as many athletic, aquatic and sporting events gratis as does the Belleville Yacht Club and all gratis to the public at large. The club members themselves foot the bill of the cleaning of their own projects and their annual field day and aquatic meet each Labor Day speaks of their enthusiasm. All summer long the club supplies entertainment for the public in their weekly sailing races and now they have provided an open-air skating rink for the use of the public, without a cent of cost to members. Their enlarging and remodelling of their club house was a distinct surprise, as it took many a long day's labor and considerable cash to put it in shape. It is established by the members and is credit to the city. A few more going concerns like the B.Y. and A.C. would prove a great boon to sports-loving folk in Belleville.

From 5:00 p.m. Monday until 5:00 a.m. today Manager George Gay, and his assistants at the Belleville Arena, had flooded the ice surface exactly 44 times and a splendid sheet of ice, fully six inches thick awaits skaters and hockey teams tonight. Flooding started Sunday day and flooded whenever possible yesterday and again last night," explained Mr. Gay as he proudly pointed to a glass-like sheet of ice at the Arena today.

London's Henley royal regatta rewards have set July 1-4 as dates for the 1936 regatta, but accounts showed a profit of $3,466, much the largest balance on hand of $8,460. In addition there is an investment of $15,000 in war stock conversion loan bonds.

HOCKEY'S BIG SEVEN

(By the Canadian Press)

Hockey's big seven was expanded to include 19 players today after Frank Boll of Toronto Ranks and Frank Boucher of New York Rangers picked up points last night that brought them into the charmed circle.

Boll's goal against Boston tied him with Charlie Conacher of Leafs for leadership in that department and Boucher's goal against Montreal Maroons left him with Eddie Shore for top assist honors.

Happy Men are Here Again!

THE RESPONSE to our offer of TWENTY PER CENT. DISCOUNT on our large line of WINTER OVERCOATS, was quick and numerous. We fitted many to a T and all were pleased and surprised that such fine overcoats could be sold at such reasonable prices. The reason is we do not care to carry over any stock—our stock must be changed constantly.

The offer of TWENTY PER CENT. DISCOUNT on Overcoats still holds—there are excellent buys, on account of the immense stock we always carry.

Commuters Request Stickers be Issued

Windsor, Ont. Jan. 15—(CP)—An attempt to persuade the Department of National Revenue to resume the issuance of windshield stickers to commuters crossing the border will be made by the Essex County, Automobile Club, it has been announced here.

The stickers were furnished Canadian motorists commuting with Canadian-licensed cars between Windsor and Detroit and eliminated the necessity of producing Canadian customs permits at each crossing. It is said the system was also in use at Bridgeburg.

Abolition of the system had caused unnecessary delay and annoyance to motorists, the club said. Guard resulting from it, it is claimed,

TENNIS COMER—Arthur Hendrix of Lakeland, Fla., law student at the University of Miami, has shown some surprising tennis in southern tournaments, beating Wilmer Allison, U.S. champion who upset Fred Perry last fall, and then whipping Bryan "Bitsy" Grant in the Miami-Biltmore tourney. Tennis experts are wondering if this is just a flash of good form or whether they are really seeing a coming national star.

CHINESE STUDENTS LEAD PROTEST—More than 100 students were injured, some seriously, in serious rioting in Peiping, China, on December 16, when 3,000 striking students demonstrated against Japanese imperialism and the North China autonomy movement. An incident of the fighting is pictured. It shows one student in the arms of the law, and getting the worst of it. The officer on the left is armed with an executioner's sword, and on the RIGHT a bamboo club that looks like a baseball bat is the weapon.

PRINCIPALS IN HEIRESS' $500,000 STERILIZATION SUIT—Figures in San Francisco's sensational $500,000 damage suit filed by Ann Cooper Hewitt, young heiress, against her mother, a psychiatrist and two physicians, are pictured above. According to Miss Hewitt, the mother duped her into a sterilization operation in an effort to gain control of a $10,000,000 fortune left by her father, the late Peter Cooper Hewitt, noted inventor. Miss Hewitt; the mother, Mrs. Maryon Hewitt McCarter; the dead inventor; Miss Hewitt' attorney, Russell Tyler, and Mrs. McCarter's attorney, Aaron Sapiro, are pictured.

PRINCE AND DUCHESS TO WED—According to whisperings in royal circles, the Grand Duchess Kyra, second daughter of the Russian pretender, may soon become the bride of Louis Ferdinand, the second son of the former German crown prince. Thousands upon thousands of the clips are being purchased by the night haunts to be passed out to patrons when the orchestras play the tune that makes one's head go 'round and 'round. Manufacturers of the clip expect to turn out 2,000,000 clips before the song's popularity fades.

"JAPRIS" CONDON LEAVES U.S.—Dr. John F. Condon, "Jafsie" of the Lindbergh case, will be in Panama on January 17, the day Bruno Richard Hauptmann is scheduled to die in the electric chair. Dr. Condon followed the example set by Colonel Lindbergh and his family. Accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Myra Booker, shown with him. Dr. Condon sailed aboard the S.S. Santa Rita. His sailing came as a surprise. It had been announced from New Jersey Governor Hoffman's office that Condon would be held for further questioning re magazine article.

JOHN J. RASKOB PIERRE S. duPONT

MOTHER OF ENGLAND'S QUADS SEES THEM FOR FIRST TIME—Residents of St. Neots, England, a little foundry town, are as proud of the fifth quadruplets, recently arrived, as Canada is of the Dionne quintuplets. Mrs. Doris Miles, mother of the infants, is pictured here meeting her offspring formally for the first time, one month after their birth. She had to wear a germ-proof mask to enter the babies' nursery, and that rule will be followed in all cases. Dr. Harrison who served as their birth and is now watching their progress, is supervising the infants much in the same manner as did Dr. Dafoe with the Dionne five.

JAPAN SENDS HOCKEY TEAM TO WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES—Were you aware that Japan will compete in hockey events at the Olympic games? Neither were we until we saw this picture. Here are the puckchasers from the land of the rising sun saying farewell to well-wishers as they prepare to leave for the Bavarian hills where the winter games will be played. The Japanese figure-skating team is also included in the group.

"FEATHERWEIGHT" CHAMPIONS—Tiniest of fowl are these two proud champions. The tiny silver bantam pullet, smallest at the New York poultry show, throws its chest out with pride, standing beside a white Wyandotte cock bird, champion and largest at the show. In spite of the difference they are both "feather-weight champions."

THOUGHT BURNED AFTER MURDER CHILD FOUND ALIVE—Tragedy in the form of murder struck the little village of Pacific Junction, near Moncton, N.B. when two sons of Mrs. May Bannister visited the cottage of Philip Lake. A quarrel ensued in which, it is alleged, Lake was murdered. In the scuffle, the cottage was burned to the ground, and Mrs. Lake and a 20-months-old son were burned to death. A second child (shown INSET, ABOVE) was thought to have been cremated, but was later found at the Bannister home. Mrs. Bannister at first claimed the 6-months-old child as her own, but later admitted it was not. The quiet little village of Pacific Junction is shown ABOVE.

"Shanghai Rose"

By Anne Forester

Suddenly she walked to the window and back, her rather pale face lingering on that light at the desk. If Jeff Therrold had not been such a close friend, she would have hadn't yet had his chance for a proposal—for a desperate mood like this impulse flamed within her to go up to his office now and tell him the whole wretched truth. Knowing even as the thought died still-born, that she lacked courage or knew-how to do any such thing. After all, what could the Therrolds do to her? They couldn't touch Kitten; the thing was absurd; she was a fool to let her imagination run on.

Suddenly, without quite knowing how it came about, she found herself crouched low in the chair by the stove. Shaking in a perfect tornado of fear. Rigid in the grip of a terror she had fought all week; feeling it grip her by the throat. Tears, hot and choking, welled into her eyes, her heart contracting with an actual physical pain—the menacing taunting words of Austin Deering hurling a devil's imitation against her brain.

They had wanted her baby, they had said so at the first. What could she do if they saw fit to make capital of Deering's lies?

Aimlessly she wandered into the small room back of the store, while peering to herself, salt tears running unheeded down her face; the palms of her frantic hands beating desperately together again and again. Over it all, like a wild litany of misery, seeing Austin Deering's sly, furtive smile, his tight, secretive eyes—knowing that he would scruple at no lie to gain his ends; that he was powerful—too—to fight him.

Exhausted she sank onto the edge of the lumpy bed. Eyes wide and dilated like a doll's. Miss Abby —but Miss Abby was not yet back in town. She had gone during Christmas for her annual visitation to New York. Another thought .... that money in the bank.... the bank she had received for the sweetest host, intended for that joyous baby. Money that now business must seek, she could draw it out tomorrow—run and go far away. Somewhere where they couldn't touch Kitten, ever again. Better the awful if that dread never came than the endless prospect of defending herself through the years from shadows that leered out of the dark. The Therrolds were rich; they had hated her from the first. Well, they wouldn't get her—baby—they couldn't—oh, dear God!

Surging upward from the sea of black, turbulent thought out of a maze, or desperation and fear, the girl found herself standing shaking in the centre of the room, the blood roaring wildly in her ears. She had been asleep on that couch .... and the telephone in the store was ringing, had been ringing for an endless, forgotten time.

"Yes, Lottie. It's Rose—I can't hear.... don't speak so loud!"

But the news which Lottie Welch was trying to impart over the phone could be told in nothing less than a shriek!

x x x

Slowly Rose Therrold retraced her steps to the couch. Slowly she sank down on its edge, fixedly she regarded the spotted wall-paper before her eyes, her mind focusing slowly, painfully to her surroundings in the little room.

Lottie's voice. What was it she had been saying just now.... Lottie's words....

Dazzled of its hysterical fluidness, Lottie's news slowly crystallized in her mind into one gleaming, horrifying fact.

Barbara Therrold had eloped with Austin Deering!

Mr. Mortis Mortis had panted, had just arrived at Lottie's with mail from up-stairs! Had seen that Captain Deering and Barbara at the Main Hotel! Registering, they were—Mr. Mortis had made sure—Mr. Mortis knew the clerk, knew all the clerks, it was Mr. Mortis's regular route. Going to be married right there, they were, Lottie meaning to take the night train to New York tonight, and then a boat.... To China! Yes, there was a boat out of New York at midnight! Mr. Mortis had it positively from the clerk!.... Rose remembered, that fender Austin Deering had smashed on Mr. Mortis's car. Well, sir, no one could go 'round and smash fenders on Otto Mortis and get away! No, sir! And here she was right now, minding half the hell at the Town Hall—but didn't Rose think anything ought to fall the Therrolds! Didn't Rose think....

With a click and a snarling sigh the telephone connection had been abruptly severed.

Rose didn't think. Halfway through the amazing conversation, Rose's brain had simply ceased to function at all. Now that the significance of the thing began to take form, her own devastating imaginings of the hour before receded resolutely into the background.

She was not, Rose told herself, interested in the final in what happened to Barbara Therrold. Nor to any of the Therrolds—just so they let her alone. She had tried neighboring once, and had gotten for her pains contemptuous scoffing and a lesson she still winced to recall.

Barbara Therrold and Austin Deering! Somehow the word didn't shake sense. Why, Deering had a wife in Shanghai.... everyone there knew that pallid, white-faced thing. A wife he could simply never hope to get rid of.

Through the blurred, steamy window her eyes caught out the light that burned in the office of Jeff Therrold of the Mill. As she looked it went out. Blinked and shone for a moment again. Jeffrey Therrold, closing his office and going home for the night.... Barbara Therrold.... The night came again.

Behind Rose's back the door of Welch's store closed sharply with a click. Behind her slights form dragged the skirts of her coat; the folds of her dress whipped back in the biting wind. Dark hair streaming behind her, gasping and whimpering she ran, fled, a child of smothering snow—up again, the cold air searing her lungs as she panted and sobbed....

Past the gate-keeper at the Mill, past the dark closed caverns of the yard. Straight on went her flying steps toward the open office door of that office, where Jeff Therrold stood staring in amazement through the snow.

With a sob of relief, she stumbled over the threshold at last; shaut into his arms.

CHAPTER XI.

BARBARA COMES HOME

The car seemed to have endlessly and forever through black velvet, shot with tiny gilt stars.

Past bare trees, standing stark, with uplifted, naked arms raised to a moonless sky. Past snow-covered fences, wandering snakelike into the gloom. Past farmhouses, huddled into mounds of snowy silence, deserted and still under the stars. Past the little cottages fringing the villages on the way.... a blur of winking Christmas-tree shining dimly through the frosted windows of the night.

Gathered long since flung behind—the County Road, the small-town lights along the way, receding by the minute in the rear.

Jeffrey Therrold, his mouth tightening grimly even as he compelled her toward the door, had hustled without questioning. As the story Rose had poured forth. There was no mistaking the convincing ring of its authenticity. Lottie's tale. Even Jeffrey—with the events of the summer fresh in his mind's eye—granted it no shadow of doubt.

Barbara, he thought, spinning the wheel through the crunching snow .... Barbara, sore at heart at the first rebuff life had meted out! Childishly bitter against the whole world, striking out as a child strikes in the only way she knew....

x x x

It was his fault—his stupid, blundering, maudlin lack of tact. "You're sure Lottie said—the Main Hotel?" he muttered without turning his head. Conscious, even through the black pit of his thoughts, of every movement of the pliant shoulder so near to his own.

"Yes," Rose huddled restlessly further into the seat. Pity and a consumed numbness in her heart, preparing over the pain in its own.

"If only they haven't gone on to New York! God! don't let them have left the County Seat before we arrive!" Blade, and a murderous fury raging fiercely through the man's veins. Babs! sang the crunching, swimming tires. Little Babs! cried the voice that beat against his brain. His mouth twisted again into a torturing line of pain. She couldn't—she wouldn't do this to her mother. Is him? Why, only the night before he had gone on this trip she had sat close beside him on the porch. Sat without talking, he remembered that now. When would he hear her speak again?

Shutter flashes of her came to him, dancing crazily against the blur of lights on the road.... Sweet little Barbara, in brief contact with middle-abuse and sin, fighting the battles of the spoiled baby Harvey against Ursula's childish, meaningless and small woe. Ursula had always been a hellcat—but Babs —Says had a fine scorn for pretenses even then. Babs, with her fine courage, her spontaneous, her strong will; that time she had broken her arm and in save her mother a shock, never told.... Proud Barbara, wilful, lovable Barbara, humbled now, broken, disillusioned—oh, God! Couldn't he!.... Tender, foolish, splendid Barbara, who had never known anything but luxury and care and love....

Rose, sitting bolt upright now, two blazing spots of color in her face, stared miserably out at the flying road. A curious weakness assailed her, a dim sense of groping through a fog. She pushed the cloud of soft, dark hair out of her eyes, steadying herself against the lurching daze of the car. Feeling, for the first time in the long, desperate week a relief from the tension that had dragged at her mind: an odd sense of shifting the burden to the shoulder by her side.

Yet paradoxically enough, the thought of again facing Deering gave her a sick sense of falling through space. Those light, derisive eyes, in the expressionless mask of his face, that purring, menacing voice saying words that would scar forever into her brain. What would he do—what would Barbara Therrold do, seeing her in the company of Jeff Therrold, knowing she must have been back of his presence by some way?

She wondered, with a groping, bewildered sort of perplexity, how a girl like that could do what Barbara had just done. Entirely without experience with life, though she was; attracted by the swaggering ruthlessness, the consciously charming manners, the flattering deference of his attentions, though she might be—how could this girl who had everything life's could give, throw it away for a thing like Austin Deering? That it was she, herself, who was the innocent cause of Barbara's state of mind. Rose Therrold was never to know.

HAUPTMANN LOSES PETITION TO SUPREME COURT

Earthquake Rocks Bloemfontein and All Parts of Orange Free State

Rendezvous With Death May be Delayed Until All Angles Investigated

Defence Has Two Plans to Save Bruno From "Hot Seat"

MANY CONFERENCES

Governor Likely to Grant Reprieve to Question Condemned

(By Dale Harrison)

(Copyright, 1936, By The Associated Press)

Trenton, N.J., Jan. 16—Amid unsubstantiated reports of a reprieve from a new figure, Bruno Hauptmann's fate forked two ways today, toward United States Supreme Court and the office of Gov. Harold G. Hoffman.

In one of these directions lay the only hope of the convicted kidnap slayer of the Lindbergh baby to escape his rendezvous with death tomorrow at 8 a.m., EST.

Reports, which lacked official confirmation, said a committee of persons cited a written confession with the Governor, and believed to favor a reprieve if developments warrant.

There was no indication of the nature of the purported document or of the persons who had been cited in connection with the confession rumors.

Wednesday night's midnight conference in a New York hotel, presumably conducted in an atmosphere of tense speculation he was conferring with other officials on executing new evidence.

J. Edgar Hoover, chief Federal Bureau of Investigation, left the hotel early today but declined to say whether he had talked with Hoffman.

"I don't know anything about it," he said of the reported confession.

Any statement will have to come from the Governor.

Two hours earlier Edward J. Reilly, Hauptmann counsel, emerged during the trial at Flemington a year ago, had entered the conference hotel. Like Hoover, he was silent as to the reason for his visit.

"That's connected with my theory that no one man could kidnap the child," he said, when informed of the purported confession.

Night Get Reprieve

"It looks to me as if Hauptmann is going to get a reprieve. It may possibly be that this alleged participant was one of the outside men in the actual kidnapping."

Although the night conference were surrounded by secrecy, it was announced late yesterday afternoon Hoover talked in New York with New Jersey and Federal officials. Col. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, head of the New Jersey State Police; Mayor Fiorello Laguardia of New York and Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine of New York attended the closed meeting.

All three men would be awakened during the meeting had no connection with Hauptmann's case, but in some quarters there were surmises Governor Hoffman had made overtures to officials to hear the reported confession.

The governor decided to meet again this afternoon, it was learned, and then issue a statement. Some sources believed the conference dealt with interstate racketeering.

The Supreme Court

Two of Hauptmann's lawyers meanwhile took to Washington to determine whether the Bronx carpenter in the death house, seeking to bind the United States Supreme Court would be added to grant a writ of stay of execution.

The attorneys did not disclose their plans, but persons close to the defence expressed Hauptmann's hopes as follows:

The petition would be filed with the Clerk of the Supreme Court.

The attorneys, Neil Burkinshaw and Hugo Seibert, then would apply to a member of the Court, probably Justice Owen Roberts, for a stay of Hauptmann's execution to give the High Court a chance to act on the petition. This procedure generally requires about 10 days.

May Question Condon

If the stay should be granted, Hauptmann's life automatically would be prolonged. Should it be denied, the defence then would ask Governor Hoffman for the reprieve on the plea a new Court action had been started.

Some believed the Governor would delay the electrocution in order to question Dr. John F. Condon—the "Jafsie" of the Lindbergh ransom negotiations—who is on a Caribbean cruise. He and his daughter, Mrs. Myra Hacker, will land tomorrow afternoon at Cristobal

HAUPTMANN ASKS SUPREME COURT TO STAY DEATH

One of Two Last Escapes Sought by Convicted Carpenter

'CONFESSION' STORY

Decision of Court May Not Be Made Before Noon on Friday

Washington, Jan. 16 (AP) — A charge the prosecution had "suppressed" important evidence favorable to Bruno Richard Hauptmann was made to the Supreme Court of the United States today by attorneys seeking to save the convicted kidnaper and murderer from the electric chair tomorrow night.

The accusation was made in a petition for a writ of habeas Corpus and for a stay of execution presented to Associate Justice Owen J. Roberts immediately after its receipts" by them.

The attorneys said it was testified at the trial the ransom never had left the possession of the officers.

Suppressed

Letters between Hauptmann and Isidore Fisch, who died in Germany, were said to have been suppressed.

The State also was said to have "tried to create an atmosphere at the trial" to deceive the kidnap ladder "was materially altered and changed between the time it was confiscated and its evidence."

Washington, Jan. 16 (AP)—In a dramatic eleventh hour effort attorneys for Bruno Richard Hauptmann appealed today to the Supreme Court to save the convicted kidnaper and murderer of the Lindbergh baby from the electric chair tomorrow night.

A petition for a writ of Habeas Corpus and a stay of execution was presented to Justice Roberts after it is met at noon.

"I have not seen the papers," was the only comment of Chief Justice Hughes.

The motion was made by Neil Burkinshaw, one of Hauptmann's attorneys.

"I ask leave of court to present an original petition for a writ of Habeas Corpus and for a stay of the order of judgment," he said.

The motion proceedings lasted only a few seconds.

Motion Is Denied

Court observers said, however, the Justices seldom interfere in criminal cases after the highest tribunal has already have refused to review Hauptmann conviction.

The Justices could discuss the motion during the lunch recess from 2 to 3 p.m. today but observers said they didn't when the court reconvened. Or if the announcement might be deferred until noon tomorrow.

Only in extraordinary circumstances is an appeal granted after denial of the court.

Stays of "Confession" Known.

Trenton, N.J., Jan. 16 (AP) (Copyright)—Simultaneous with an announcement by Governor Harold G. Hoffman's press aide here that the executive had "no knowledge of any confession" in the Lindbergh case, it was stated in other high sources today: "There has been a confession, and it is by some one other than Bruno Richard Hauptmann."

It was understood that the Governor spent a hectic night in conference with a public official in New York City.

About the same time, in Washington, two lawyers for Hauptmann, who has been condemned to die tomorrow night for the Lindbergh murder, left their offices for the United States Supreme Court to seek a writ of Habeas Corpus.

PACIFIC TRUCE ARRIVES AT END AS PARLEY FAILS

Grave Decisions Lie Before Empire in Consequence Says Observers

RACE WILL RESUME

Replacement of Old Ships And Building of New Craft Expected

(By George Hambleton)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 16—(CP)—Hallmarked decisions lie before the British Commonwealth of Nations. The withdrawal of the Japanese from the International Naval Conference, which soon now had the conference itself, means that the "Pacific truce" established by the Washington Treaty of 1922 is gone.

A year ago Japan denounced the Treaty, to end on the 31st day of 1936 with nothing to take its place.

All representatives of the Dominions conferred with the British Admiralty and chief delegates at the Foreign office this morning. High Commissioner Vincent Massey represented Canada.

The "guiding principles of the Washington Treaty were:

1. The Naval Ratio System, allowing the United States five to the British Commonwealth's five to Japan's three.

2. An agreement not to fortify certain islands in the Pacific.

3. The integrity of China with the maintenance of the "open door".

Japan Will Resume

At the time of these agreements the United States was planning to create first-class naval bases at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii—some-what lifting the Bonin Islands.

With the Washington Treaty gone, of the way after December 31, 1936, no check will remain on the Pacific race.

The call to more armaments is already being sounded.

"As the result of the collapse of the Five-Power Naval Conference" writes the Naval correspondent of The Daily Telegraph, "Japan will be free no choice but to introduce a large program of naval reconstruction. Britain will be forced up in the hope that a new limitation agreement would result from the present talks.

THOMPSON TRIAL NEARS ITS END

Chief Justice Row Refuses Motion to Take Case From Jury

The motion came late yesterday when H. H. Saunders, K.C., stated he believed the chief justice himself would make handing the case to the jury "a mockery."

Mr. Justice Rose said the motion would require careful consideration and he preferred to hear last night, giving his decision today.

The chief justice announced no witnesses would be called. This is the fourth day of the second trial for the charge accused of the "lilac bush murder". At the first trial last spring the jury disagreed.

PRISONER QUIZZED ON 'HOT' MONEY

Stephen Spits Says 2 Men Told How They had $23,000 Lindbergh Money

Chicago, Jan. 16 (AP)—A Chicago Bridewell prisoner's story that an "Adolph Hitler" and a "Fred Von Mank" whom he met in 1934 claimed they had $23,000 of the Lindbergh baby ransom money was investigated today by representatives of Gov. Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey, who was asked by New Jersey officials.

Attorney Bernard Finnigan, representing the prisoner, Stephen Spits, said the prisoner would communicate immediately with Governor Hoffman of New Jersey, adding his lawyer Governor Horner free Spits to go to Trenton, N.J.

Spits, 33 years old, was sentenced for obtaining money under false pretenses and his term expires tomorrow.

Questioned by T. P. Sullivan, State Bureau of Investigation Chief, John Landeco, State Pardon and Parole Board member, assistant to Attorney General Kenny Smith, Spits said in August, 1934, he met "Hitler-lein" and "Monk" at 122rd street and Lenox avenue in New York.

They told him they intended to meet the next day at a Newark, N.J. hotel.

Meeting At Farmhouse.

"I met them at Lenox," he said, "and they stated they had some 'hot money' they wanted to dispose of. We went to Newark, Ohio, a small town county to a farmhouse on the Ohio River State 33 near Marbury Park.

"They went into the farmhouse and came out with two $5 Federal Reserve bank notes. They told me to be careful as I would be arrested the next day at a Newark, N.J. hotel.

Quebec And Ontario Combine in Attack on 'Fines' Section

DISCOUNT QUESTION

Predatory Price-Cutting And Trade Discount Section Before Supreme Court

(By George Hambleton)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 16—(CP)—Discussion of the Criminal Code may result in the Supreme Court of Canada declaring it unconstitutional.

Quebec and Ontario today combined in an attack before the court on section 498A of the Criminal Code which set fines and imprisonment for predatory price-cutting and discriminatory trade discounts.

Aline Casgrain, counsel for Quebec, reminded the court some sections of the Criminal Code had been upheld although they were declared unconstitutional in 1923.

Mr. Casgrain said the public interest is endangered but the word was omitted from section 498A.

The counsel for the Attorney General Roebuck of Ontario, Mr. Geoffrion said it was no crime to grant a discount. They insisted the Criminal Code section was an invasion of provincial interest and the country was not endangered.

INDICATOR JAMS AT HIGH SPEED

First Clue to Cause of Worst Tragedy in Airline Travel

GOODWIN, Ark., Jan. 16.—(AP) —Investigators dug a jammed speed indicator today from the muddy swamp where it fell with the wreck of the crash of a luxury airliner and declared it was the first clue to the cause of the worst United States plane travel disaster.

The pitifully torn bodies of the four women, 11 men and a child were being returned to their families today, while State Rangers stood guard over the tilted wreckage to prevent further looting.

The air transport machine, jammed at 180 miles an hour—nearly three times the plane's cruising speed—was enigma as well as clue.

If the indicator was found shoved to speed at the time of the impact, The Southerner" was thundering at 300 miles an hour speed, when it smashed into the trees.

Lindbergh Seeks Estate in Italy?

ROME, Jan. 16.— (CP-Havas)— Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh will move his family from Wales to Alsatch, on the shores of Lake Maggiore, published today in the Rome newspaper Messagero.

It foreigner, presumed to be an American, made inquiries at an Alsatch real estate office for a villa on the coast, the paper said. Several villagers believed he was the famous flyer, it added.

Further evidence the stranger was Col. Lindbergh, the paper said, was his insistence the villa grounds include a field where a plane could land safely.

BUSINESS TAX IS NOT DEDUCTIBLE

Acting Premier Nixon Gives Ruling on Question

Toronto, Jan. 16 (CP)—Ontario Government officials today emphasized no change in the Province's projected income tax legislation would be made to permit deduction of municipal business tax assessment from gross personal income.

Business men have protested they should be allowed to deduct the income tax on their personal income and in addition a Municipal Business Tax. Under the Municipal Tax system, to be supplanted by the Provincial levy, business men were permitted to deduct from the gross assessment and as a result the Provincial tax estimated their assessment for business tax.

Provincial Secretary Nixon, acting Premier, said today any such provision in the legislation would bring confusion in collection since the Federal Income Department would not recognize such deduction.

The possibility was expressed however, some relief might be provided in changes to be made this session in the Municipal and Assessment Act as a result of the new income tax legislation.

"This proposal will be considered today at a meeting of cabinet to discuss plans for getting the income tax legislation through the House and into operation."

325 CORDS OF WOOD TO HEAT BUILDINGS

Of the remainder of the timber it has been sawed, approximately 325 cords of hard wood cut in Hastings County will be required this winter to supply heat to the various county buildings. It is estimated by Chief Governor C. H. French, in an address which the number of cords needed, is believed that although two years ago, when record low temperatures were recorded, 350 cords of coal were found their way into the county furnaces. Formerly coal was the standard fuel but the Hastings County Council abandoned its use in favor of wood, and the county residents signed the bill authorizing wood as the only fuel. The long planes after delivery are cut to proper length by prisoners.

VICTORIA AVENUE BAPTISTS CLOSE SUCCESSFUL YEAR

A balanced budget and a forward movement in the spiritual organization of the church for the year 1935 was the welcome statement given to members of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church last night at their annual business meeting and supper by Mr. Gordon Reay, chairman of finance for the church.

Over 150 members partook of the delicious supper provided by the ladies of the church. After the supper there was a short sing and song by Mr. Fred Jobson with Mr. Alec Gordon presiding at the piano.

Reports of the committees were given and duly approved by church Clerk Miss Claire Hitchon. The majority of reports showed financial gains and a greater work done than in the year 1934. The activities of the Sunday School and B.Y.P.U. reports were particularly gratifying to the members. The daily average Sunday School attendance for 1935 was 138. The aim for 1936 is to reach the 200 mark. The attendance for 1935 at the Sunday School and Sunday as far this year indicated that the goal will no doubt be reached. The progress of the B.Y.P.U. has been unretarded and is making greater strides with a small average attendance of a couple of years ago it has now reached the point where from fifty to sixty young people regularly convene every Sunday night for service.

The report of the nominating committee for the new officers for the ensuing year was presented by Mrs. Nurse.

MR. JAMES TALKS ON HIS TRAVELS

Interests Large Gathering at Plainfield With Graphic Story

Plainfield, Jan. 16.—The annual oyster supper given by the Women's Institute was held in the Orange Hall on Wednesday evening and was attended by some sixty adults and fifty parents and their families, members and friends of the Institute. Following the supper which began at 6.30, a program was given which opened with the ode and concluded of a solo by Mrs. Arthur Hall, song by the Women's Institute Hall. Horace Palmer, Harry Harrison, Orville Harris and Clayton Hall who played the accompaniment. Song, Thorold Hoskin and a song by Joseph Gray.

An address given by Mr. G. M. James of Bellleville was the outstanding feature of the evening. Mr. James gave a vivid and interesting talk of his trip to England and France, describing the ocean liner, icebergs, he told of standing on the spot where Ann Boleyn, wife of Henry Eighth beheaded. Mr. James dropped a bottle in mid-ocean and told how afterwards it was picked up along the northern shores of Norway and a letter it contained was returned to him. Mr. James described a visit to the Zoo and interested the boys and girls with an incident about an elephant. He also described the dolls that the late Queen Victoria had played with when she was a girl and closed his talk by stating that the two things the human life seemed to know were money and love. People wanted to love and be loved. This he exhibited by stories in connection with the war widows he saw in France. Rev. J. F. Everson at the request of Mrs. John Colden president of the Institute, acted as chairman. Mrs. Colden thanked the artists who contributed the program and especially mentioned Mr. James. On behalf of the male members of the gathering the chairman thanked the ladies for the splendid time and the delicious supper which everyone enjoyed to the full.

Restocking, Conservation and Survey Work in Program Submitted to Anglers' Club

Association in Healthy Condition And Quite Enthusiastic

DIRECTORS CHOSEN

Prizes Awarded For Catches Made During Past Season

Heavy ice may lock the lakes and streams of Hastings and adjoining counties at present, but already members of the Belleville and District Fish and Game Protective Association are engaged in preliminary plans for their most ambitious program of restocking, conservation and survey work during the coming season.

Last evening sportsmen from throughout the city and district, who comprise the association gathered at the Y.M.C.A., where they witnessed the presentation of prizes for lucky anglers, who made record catches of registered fish last summer and also participated in the election of directors for the coming year. The election was carried out by ballot, Directors who were elected will then choose their officers of the executive at a second meeting to be held on Tuesday evening.

The ten directors who were elected last evening were: Messrs. Stuart Irvine Harley Ohas. Bishop; J. H. Hogle; Dr. V. Blakslee; F. B. Smith, Wm. Wood; Chief Constable Kidd, Gerald DeLong, Cap. W. H. Bottum.

Those nominated were—Joe Short; Mr. Herkley; Chas. Bishop, Fred Sprague; Dr. Blakslee, F. B. Smith; Cap. Bottum; Ralph Wessels; Chief Kidd; Fred Croft; Art Johns; Steve License; Wm. Wood; Gerald DeLong; Fred Munoaster; Doug. Mozam; E. Sandercott; Al Hilchon and Peter Belnap.

Joe Short Chairman

In an address of welcome meeting Mr. Joe. Short, chairman of evening called attention of those present to all anglers and sportsmen present and presented a brief review of the association and its accomplishments during the past year. To the Hon. Dr. W. H. Hepburn, Provincial Minister of Health and Belleville's own representative in the Provincial House, Mr. Short paid tribute for the interest and assistance, that has been given the association during the past year. He referred to the loss, that would be felt by the city by the resignation of Secretary Mr. G. A. Weir, who is leaving the city, and being behind him a record of work and accomplishment that had done much to further the activities of the organization he represented. Secretary Weir, Mr. J. H. Legate has taken over the duties of secretary.

Finances of the Association are in good shape, it was revealed by the treasurer, Mr. Harley Bishop, particularly Legate, and the organization, which has a membership of 150 and the more difficult problems, which avoid disposal of the Club.

Several new members present were welcomed by Chairman Short, Mr. Doolittle, and Mr. Frank Hitchon, referred to Cap Bottum and Mr. Legate, who comprise the membership committee.

Many Stream Improvements

In the report submitted by Dr. Blakslee, chairman of the Restocking Committee it was revealed that during the past year practically all streams in the Belleville district of the county had been restocked with a variety of game fish. This work was carried out largely by the individual efforts of the various members, who loaned both cars and time for the purpose. No concentrated effort had ever been made in this direction before last season, it was reported out by Dr. Blakslee. Tribute was also paid Dr. Faulkner for his assistance in this matter and for the efforts put forth by Fish Secretary G. A. C. Weir. Officials of the local government Fish Hatchery and the Glenora Hatchery were also given due praise for their help in this matter.

Speckled trout were planted in Squire's Creek, Rawdon Creek, Frazer Creek, Long Lake, Green Lake and Kaiser Lake. Brown Trout had been deposited in Sharbot Lake, Clear Lake and a few more lakes in that district. Rawdon Creek also received some of this fry as well as Squire's Creek. This was done merely as a matter of experimentation, pointed out by Dr. Blakslee, and it is the hope of the Association to get more of this fry for the same purpose.

Lake Trout were put in Big Salmon Lake, Salmon and Wesleyan Lakes as well as Jamieson, Long Lake and Mud Lake. These fish all received from the local hatchery. Pickerel were put in Mud Lake, Moira Lake and Sea's Lake, while Bass were planted in Indian Lake, Moira River, Crowe Lake and Crowe River. During the coming season restocking is expected to be carried on in better volume, it was stated.

Prizes Presented

With Chief Kidd and Ralph Wessels assisting, presentation of prizes for the past season's officially registered catches of fish was made by Chairman Short.

The Pike contest win by Irvine Hackey with a 15-pound specimen had as its prize a large creel. The fish was caught in the Yorke River. The pickerel prize was won by Harvey Leeman with an 8-pound prize caught in the Trent River. Cap Bottum, consistent winner, was awarded the prize for a 9-pound Gray Trout caught at his old campground in Wellington Lake, while two prizes, one for a Speckled Trout scaling nine ounces, and an 8-pound lunge was won by Gerald DeLong. Winner of the largest small-mouth Black Bass was Ger-

[illegible] Haven, Connecticut, with a 4-pound specimen, while a 6-pound, 2-ounce large-mouth Bass won the prize for Peter Belnap. Being the most proficient caster, Arthur Johns was presented with a beautiful split bamboo rod donated by Chas. Bishop.

A motion that the government be asked to survey this county for its possibilities respecting restocking and the general condition of its streams and waters, and that a complete biological survey be also made, moved by Dr. Blakslee, received unanimous support of members present. A letter will be sent Mr. Faulkner thanking him for the assistance, that has been given the Association during the past year.

During the evening a splendid series of motion pictures portraying wild life in its natural surroundings, pictures of fishing and camping, were shown the many members present. The natural action shots were declared some of the best ever shown here. They were furnished through the courtesy of Mr. Burgess, Canadian Pacific Railway ticket agent.

POLICE BLOTTER

Gordon, alias Jimmie Asselstine of this city, was arrested late yesterday afternoon by Detective Sergt. on a charge of the theft of grain from the farm of M. J. Reid, Thurlow. Asselstine was immediately arraigned before Justice of the Peace, Alex Gordon, and remanded until Friday.

Asselstine was apprehended shortly after the previous arrest of Stanley Pack, also of the city, who pleaded guilty to the theft of Mr. Reid's grain, when he appeared before Magistrate J. J. Bullen, K.C., on Monday. Judgment in Pack's case was enlarged until Friday, at which time he and Asselstine will appear. Asselstine refused to commit, it was stated, when questioned by the Provincial Police but admitted that he had committed about 60 bushels of oats from his grain bins recently, but refused to make a statement. In his statement, that he had only taken the grain because he was hungry, police authorities disclosed today.

Activities in and around local police circles have been unexceptionally quiet during the past few days, no charges being laid for serious offences. Only six transients appeared before the night sergeant last night in the police court quarters. All were liberated early Monday and directly moved out of town.

DREAD "DISEASE DOOMS WORKERS IN U.S. TUNNEL"—The grim spectre of death walks hand in hand with workers on the tunnel being built near Gauley Bridge W. Va., that will divert waters of New river into a power house to produce inexpensive electricity. Many laborers on the project are reported to have died from the dread malady, silicosis which they contracted while tunneling through the mountain. U.S. Congress, after several years, finally has been aroused over their plight. Some of the victims are to go to Washington as witnesses if the House labor committee considers the request of Representative Marcantonio of New York for an investigation. If congress investigates the plague, a white-haired marcantonio of New York for an investigation. If congress investigates the plague, a white-haired country physician, Dr. L. R. Hayden, will become a national figure overnight. Dr. Hayden was the first to diagnose the mysterious malady that has been snuffing out many lives.

'LUNGE' SCARCE IN QUINTE BAY

"How many 'lunge were caught in the Bay of Quinte and Muscote Bay last season?" asked a member of the Belleville and District Fish and Game Protective Association at its annual meeting held last evening.

Silence greeted the question for a moment or two. Finally it was revealed by further questioning of Chairman Jos. Sherit that only one of the members present knew of a single catch being made during the season.

"Lunge will not go where nets are kept in the water. I just asked the question to find out if I could how many of the fish are still left in the Bay. It seems that there are very few," commented the first questioner. "And at this point I am of the opinion that we will have to do something about it very quickly if we are to have any 'lunge left in these waters," it was added.

"We have already taken action on this matter," responded Dr. V. Blake, member of the executive. "We have our application in to the government to consider seriously the restocking of the Bay of Quinte with 'lunge fry, and also Muscote Bay. I wouldn't be surprised if, at some later date, the whole Bay of Quinte was closed and rendered just a sanctuary where this fish could be bred. The bay is conceded one of the greatest, if not the greatest, breeding grounds for lunge on the whole North American continent.

RENDEZVOUS MAY BE DELAYED

Canal Zone.

A 30-day reprieve would make it possible for Dr. Condon to return and answer Hoffman's expressed doubts about certain magazine articles he has written on the crime, which occurred March 1, 1932.

Claims Map Known

Montreal, Jan. 16.—(CP)— Convinced he knows identity of the J. J. Faulkner mentioning in the Lindbergh murder mystery, Alex Bulloch, Montreal motor car salesman, planned to leave for New York today to disclose to United States authorities details of his acquaintance with a man by the same name.

Bulloch with a half-dozen photographs of the man, said he hoped to confer with authorities the possibility J. J. Faulkner under whose name part of the Lindbergh ransom money was deposited in a bank, was the man, who spent a summer in the Laurentian mountains in 1932.

It was a mysterious, dissipated-looking man about 36 years of age, that Bulloch described as the Jimmy Faulkner he spent five months with at St. Agathe 70 miles north of Montreal. Letters written to Governor Hoffman over the signature of J. J. Faulkner were said by Bulloch to have been in the same hand as notes he had from the summer neighbor, a ready-spending man who tossed away American $100 bills three after time".

Telephone calls poured into the salesman's home until early today, one of them purportedly from David Wilentz, prosecutor at Bruno Hauptmann's trial. Others were from New York and Chicago newspapers, Bulloch said, seeking details of his story. Bulloch talked to one of the New York newspaper men but was not home when the purported Wilentz call came through.

Had Plenty of Dough

It was only yesterday Bulloch came suddenly to the conclusion Faulkner was the man mentioned in the Lindbergh case. A mutual friend he said had brought him a facsimile of the letter to Governor Hoffman and immediately he recognized the handwriting as that of his friend, Jimmy Faulkner. Copies of the Hoffman letter and samples of Jimmy Faulkner's writing in a note to a Montreal lawyer "can't be told apart," said Bulloch. The lawyer, whom identity he declined to reveal, and a number of friends agreed the writing was similar he said.

No mention of his suspicions had been made to police, the salesman said, as he considered the Montreal authorities would make the discovery in the case.

Bulloch said one day when he was in Faulkner's hotel room he saw "several bundles of money". The money was in small bundles and covered the bottom of the club bag, Bulloch said, and Faulkner replied he "made a cleanup in the States", when asked where the bell did you get all the dough?"

Clarence Honey manager of the hotel where Faulkner spent many evenings during his five months' visit, and the cashier both confirmed what Bulloch said about his friend's ready spending. Honey also agreed with Bulloch's "rough estimate" Faulkner had spent about $3,500 before leaving the hotel "flat broke". Honey said he had seen the man in New York as late as last November, entering a Broadway Night Club. But prior to that he had heard Faulkner was "broke" and had been "trying to get something to do" in Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa.

$80,000 DAMAGE IN TORONTO FIRE

Blaze Accompanied by Three Explosions Which Baffle Firemen

Toronto, Jan. 16.—(CP)— Fire of undetermined origin early today razed one four-storey building and threatened two others, causing damage, estimated at $80,000. Three explosions accompanied the fire, which baffled firemen for nearly two hours.

Occupants of the building, the Black Forest Clock Company, Norusa Fezzi, Ltd., makers of essential oils; Federal Import and Supply Company, hardware merchants; Ltd Mycol Company, chinaware dealers, feared total losses.

Main damage was done to the premises of the clock firm, where it was thought some inflammable substance acted for a time as an accelerator to the flames.

Firemen said the explosions were such as might come from benzine cans.

ALBERTA YOUTH CLIPPER PILOT

Successful Trans - Pacific Flight Realization Dream Comes True

Stuboo, Alta., Jan. 16 (CP)—A flair for mechanics lifted Fred Kryzwinkiha from the rangelands of Alberta to the cockpit of the world's wonder airplane. When the China Clipper nosed down into San Francisco harbor after completing its first trans-Pacific flight the shock-haired Albertan climbed from the co-pilot's seat with the realization of a dream come true.

Born on a Foothills farm, near here, Freddie found life on the open range a bit irksome. There was no thrill for him in the daily routine of rounding up cows at milking time. Aviation was in his infancy but his 16-year-old lad who "loved to tinker with machinery," was carefully laying the groundwork that was to carry him to his goal.

He secured a job with a section gang and saved enough money to put himself through technical school. His training there brought him a position as a garage assistant, at Calgary. Airplanes interested him, so he carefully put aside enough money to enable him to visit the large airports in the United States. While in Florida he was signed as mechanic with an airways company.

The rest was easy. During three years spent in South America he learned to fly. His greatest thrill, however, came with his election as a co-pilot on the China Clipper, huge Pan-American flying boat groomed for scheduled flights across the Pacific to the Philippines under the command of Captain Edwin C. Musick.

The 23-year-old youth loves flying. In a letter to his brother Alex, here, he admits the trans-Pacific hops are not as easy as the "landlubbers" imagine but the knowledge of a perfect flight and landing receptions take the "edge" off the voyage.

Veteran Guide Seeks Reclusion

Toronto, Jan. 16 (CP)—After 20 years' service as guide in the Ontario Legislative Buildings, 'Charlie' Carlisle has resigned because of ill health to return to his gardening and antiques.

He served under six Provincial premiers, starting with Sir James Whitney, who brought him to Queen's Park in 1906 and has had the privilege of meeting many governors-general of Canada and other distinguished visitors to the big candidate buildings.

But the most interesting part of his work he said last night before leaving the building near the entrance doors in the main corridor, was the never ending peculiar questions put to him by 'United States tourists.

Several have asked to see Queen Mary's bedroom. A Senator from New South Wales, informed of the size of the Province, remarked it was "a pity we have not a capital city." He expressed surprise, said Charlie, when informed by the guide, that never had a fire occurred, or said he has conducted 100,000 sightseers through the Legislative Buildings.

Voluntarily, Charlie listed the three finest men in Toronto as Senator Frank P. O'Connor, President H. J. Cody of the University of Toronto, and Abe Orpen, race-track owner.

May Place Financing By Dominion Control

Ottawa, Jan. 15 (CP)—Provincial governments with fiscal difficulties in a position of needing guarantees from the Dominion Treasury to get back their borrowing operations were considering today a proposal that place two new factors public financing under control of Federal authorities.

Representatives of all Provincial Treasuries, in committee session with the Dominion Department of Finance, concluded yesterday, that financial relations between the Province would be placed on constitutional and business-like basis if evolving specific collateral for guarantees and effective Dominion control.

Those Provinces in the happy circumstances of being able to negotiate loans without Dominion aid may enter the scheme if they desire but guarantees under the proposed system would be contingent only upon the application of control by a loan council.

MR. LEWERS WELCOMED

Citizens of Belleville and the surrounding countryside have welcomed Mr. W. T. R. Lewers as manager of the local branch of the Bank of Montreal who succeeds Mr. G. A. D. Weir, who has retired. Mr. Lewers has held many important posts in the bank and in every branch he has occupied, he has had the most successful and cordial relations with the bank's patrons. He has also taken no small share in the life of the various communities in which he has resided and Belleville may well feel assured that in him will be found a worthy citizen whose contribution to the life of this community will be marked.

His extensive knowledge of banking and of business and industry, his genial and cordial relations with the patrons of the bank and with citizens generally will, according to those who have met and who know Mr. Lewers, make his sojourn in Belleville a happy as well as a successful one.

CHURCHES SHOW PROGRESS

Churches, the finest example of the spirit of true socialism, have naturally been hard hit through the depression era, but are showing progress, some are getting out of the red and have succeeded in balancing their budgets.

Here are individuals and families organized for mutual and community benefit which has a mighty influence upon the life of the nation. Whatever the faults of the churches, they no doubt are the underlying factor in the national life. Civilization owes untold benefits to these voluntary organizations of men and women for the spiritual and temporal good of the community and themselves. Without them our schools and our politics, our community life would be drear spectacles, unmoral if not immoral.

Here are those who bear the willing burden of carrying the world's civilization, giving to a cause in which others benefit. In the vast majority of cases, church people expect no financial return, they just desire the opportunity of worshipping and bearing their part in the burden of humanity. The burden is willingly borne except in as far as man inherently feels a duty to support his good. But some do not and play a man's part in the church's task, by refusing to share in its work, the work must be considered as voluntary.

And now due to the results reported of the past two years. Debts are being wiped out by hard work and economy and the current expenses met and more than met, mission funds are showing increases, so somebody is bearing more. Church members like all men and women have learned the lesson of hard times. At least it is hoped that the bitter lesson has been a profit to them as to others.

NAVAL PARLEY WRECKED

What does the break-up of the naval conference in London mean? Other conferences have gone on the socks for the same reason. But there is a difference—the nations today are outspoken. There was much pretence under kind words in the other parleys.

Is it that the nations today feel their strength and so are able to be bold and state their attitude in the open? The old style conferences which preceded the present conference did not deceive any nation though they may have led people into an unwarranted sense of security.

A few years ago if the statements had been given out which are given out today there would have been much commotion in the reading world, maybe perchance the situation is no worse than it was because the majority of the nations which are outspoken today and much the same attitude they have today though they did not express it.

BANKERS' ADVICE

Statements of bank heads at annual meetings of these institutions should be read not only by the shareholders but by all citizens especially those who are in representative offices, such as council members, and members of civic boards. Individuals can also learn a lesson.

How credit is handled means a great deal in the welfare of a country. The individual should learn from these statements that he as well as the large corporations and the municipality is those responsible for conditions which may arise such as the depression. The individual knows when he is going beyond his means, even more than the corporation does. In the present time the individual has been bearing a heavy load and he who is beneath all the governmental and municipal expenditure. He needs to be encouraged to carry on for he is he who must lift the depression.

Reading of these bank reports stimulates sanity of view on the part of the citizens at large.

MY COAL STOVE

Oh! What a joy my stove has been Through many winter days!
Its glow and gleam of ruddy light
Through dreary days and winter night
Are worth a meed of praise.

A bit old-fashioned it may be,
But like a long-tried friend,
It never failed to do its part
So with a fond and grateful heart
Its name I will defend.

When illness came and nights were long
It glowed with friendly cheer,
When heavy was the hand of pain
And slumber sought our eyes in vain,
Its light a comrade dear.

And many a night about the fire
Rang merry song and jest,
With friends around the fireside bright
The hours sped by in keen delight,
For simple joys are best.

And now as by my fire I sit
One thought my spirit cheers,
'Twas love that shed its glowing light
Upon our happy hearthstone bright
Through all the changing years.

ONUS OF PROVING AGE rests on beverage room proprietors in the case of minors drinking beer, according to Police Magistrate Kirkland, of Smith's Falls. "This is a serious offence and hotel proprietors must make sure they do not serve minors", said the Magistrate, who warned that merely enquiring the age of the applicant for beer would not suffice. A fine of $50 was imposed on a Smith's Falls hotel proprietor for serving beer to a man under the influence of liquor.

A PHILATELIST is a collector of postage stamps of all countries, a very absorbing, interesting and educating hobby which has passed the time pleasantly and improved the mind of many men and women in all ages since postage stamps were invented. His Majesty, King George, has one of the largest and finest stamp collections in the world. This shows that postage stamp collecting is a Royal pursuit. There are some enthusiastic philatelists in Belleville, and this city also has the distinction of being the home of what is considered the best collection of Canadian stamps in the Dominion of Canada, the property of Mr. G. M. James, recently honored over the radio in a review of Mr. James' book, "The Romance of Stamps". Medical specialists have a saying "Happy is the Hobby and Live Longer". So, if you are looking for an interesting hobby become a Philatelist.

"ROXY" ON THE AIR, was one of the earliest and most popular programs on the radio, known generally as "Roxy's Gang". Samuel L. Rothafel, "Roxy" for short, was a great showman. While the early days of radio he came to Ontario and put on a number of broadcasts for various clients, large and small, an advertising stunt. Belleville was among the few important centres of any size which refused to be "Roxyized". Roxy's greatest achievement was in the creation of Radio City, New York, in which the headquarters of the large broadcasting chains are located, also several theatres of magnificent proportions and expression the very latest in everything pertaining to stage and screen. The Rockfellers were interested financially in this wonder palace, on which a mortgage for twenty-five million dollars was placed, an evidence of the immense sum of money expended upon its creation. Now Roxy is listed as having answered the final curtain call and joined the actors and producers across the great divide where there is no shadow of sorrow and where the "Ghost always walks."

LOOKING BACKWARD

20 YEARS AGO

Jan. 16th., 1916.

In the hockey match between Belleville and Picton, the former team won the score being 8 to 5. Phillips, Symons, Whitty and Hayes fired it all. Might just as well stop the article now. Picton forwards would not work down until they struck that stone wall defence, then good night. There was nothing to it, they simply couldn't get by. Phillips stopped shots that seemed impossible and did it time and time again. Either Whitty or Symons went down the ice apparently at will; didn't always score but always went through. These five made as strong a defence as Belleville has seen in years. Don't think that Belleville forwards were not good because they were. Pickle, Whalen, Simmonds and Mitchell played a stellar game. Pinkie remains one of his great supporters, Gymonds, in his style and play. Picton: Pickle rover; Whalen centre; Simmonds right wing; Mitchell left wing. Picton: Walsh goal; Redbrough defence; Heffernan point; Barns rover; Cooper centre; Bert Burns right wing; Hudgins left wing. Referee A. Stone, Picton.

Mr. W. O. Mikel, K. C., will conduct the criminal business on behalf of the Crown at the Ottawa Assize commencing next week.

Belleville Rifle Club. Last night's scores were as follows out of a possible 100; A. Hall 98; J. C. Wills 96; H. Hall 96; A. R. Symons 97; G. D. Gratton 97; W. J. Andrews 96; G. B. Smith 96; J. Peck 96; C. J. Wills 94.

KING OPPOSES 60 YEAR LIMIT

Premier Speaks in Opposition to Recommendation of Labor Congress

Ottawa, Jan. 16—(CP)—Practically all recommendations laid before the government today by the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada and affiliated unions are subject of present consideration by the government in making up its legislative program, Prime Minister Mackenzie King told the delegation that waited upon him and his ministers.

But there was the suggestion, the Prime Minister said, that he would not approve. That was a recommendation the government set the pace for a general movement to retire workers at the age of 60.

"That," the Prime Minister said, "is a reflection upon myself and the President of the Trades and Labor Council. There are a good many self-denying ordinances I am prepared to put by force but that is not one of them. That is part of the policy of scarcity which I think is all wrong. We should aim at a policy of plenty in this land."

Section 98

On the recommendation of the delegation that Section 98 of the criminal code be repealed Minister of Justice Lapointe made the observation advocating repeal of Section 98 and I am one of them have been accused of alliance with the Communists. I would like to know if your recommendation represents the unanimous view of your associates."

"I believe it is the considered and unanimous view, as expressed in resolution, of all the people I represent," said P. M. Draper, President of the Trades and Labor Congress. "I think we have heard too much about fear of communism in Canada. Movements toward dictatorships as set up in Europe are worse."

"Yes," replied Mr. Lapointe, "and you and I are opposed to both."

A NEW IDEA IN BUSINESS WORLD MAKES ITS BOW

An event of considerable interest to the ladies of Belleville and district took place Wednesday in the opening of what is known as the Decorator's Salon, at 297 1-3 Front Street, this city, where the complete line of interior decorating of the home and office can be taken and expert advice received.

Deporator's Salon is the outcome of an idea, according to a report in Belleville with artistic tendencies which Mrs. Stanley Wilbur has been worked out according to his plans. The salon is located upon the first floor and there are actually decorated, the basic color scheme being a light yellow shade with silvers and blues for contrast, and beautiful drapes of green homespun. The complete effect tends to create the atmosphere of space and rest and artistic quietness. Mr. Wilbur is arranging for exhibitions of paintings and other works of art, and in the meantime is keeping open house for those who desire to visit Decorator's Salon. Opening day, Wednesday, there were many callers and all were pleased with the setup as something different and interesting.

Here's Chowder That Tickles the Palate

There are various ways of making chowder from Canada's excellent canned clams but here is one that was recommended by Mrs. Evelene Spencer, who was the fish cookery expert on the staff of the Dominion Department of Fisheries and was also the author of several books on methods of preparing fish for food for the table.

Boil a pint of diced potatoes in salted water; mince finely a thick slice of ham, fry the mince lightly, add a large onion, which has been finely minced, and cook the bacon and onion together until tender; heat a quart of milk, add to it a pint of boiling water and the strained juice from a large can of clams; having heated one-third of a cup of cooking oil, sift into it a half a cup of flour, add the cooked fish and ham, blend them together well together and add it to the boiling milk; add the potato and the onion; then add the potato and the water in which the pieces were cooked. Season to taste, which have first been finely minced, add salt and pepper to suit the taste, and a tablespoonful of butter just before serving. Putting a clove of garlic into the minced ham and onion when they are being cooked together adds to the savorines of the chowder.

HAUPTMANN ASKS SUPREME COURT

William Conklin, after saying the Governor had no knowledge of a confession, added that the Governor had as yet made no decision as to a reprieve.

Before the Governor also was a new affidavit by Samuel Small, a professional person at New York, which purport to reveal the inside story of the crisis which led to December 3rd to the resignation of Samuel Hoare from the Foreign Office.

The first article emphasizes the motive behind the government's original endorsement of the Hoare-Laval scheme was the knowledge of the "deplorable condition" of Britain's defences, coupled with the obvious dangers entailed in applying further sanctions.

European Situation

Three further considerations, The Morning Post adds, made the position more serious.

First, it had become increasingly evident that France would never fight except in the face of a threat of invasion of any of her territories, and that "France would not march for the League unless France was directly concerned."

Second, Germany, with whom Britain had hoped to make further pacts and arrangements, made it clear she would do nothing at the moment.

Third, while Italy became increasingly truculent, other members of the League did not become correspondingly more helpful.

FEW CARS WITH 1935 MARKERS

A few automobiles were observed today on local streets still carrying 1935 license plates, last night midnight being the designated deadline for the use of 1935 license plates on automobiles in the province of Ontario.

Motorcycle Patrolmen Irvine and Delaney today received official instructions to prosecute delinquents under this act, but only the operators of motor cars are in possession of their 1936 license plates. An extension of two weeks time had been granted to those who had ordered license plates on automobiles in the province of Ontario.

Keyes said he would like to find a man whose name he gave as Rudolph Anton Schuller with any information with "a most important bearing" on the case.

New Building

"This program is only continuous which would provide among other things the replacement of worn out battleships and the building of new ones. Britain will cover a period at least equal to the whole life of the present parliament and may be published soon. The navy estimates six weeks hence but will be more likely to be referred until next summer."

HEALTH and PSYCHOLOGY

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.

Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

The story of the blood is most fascinating. One of the vital fluid which pervades the entire body and upon which our very existence depends, literally day in its work, is as vivid a tale as any in the realm of fiction.

The most striking thing about blood is probably its characteristic red color. This is due to the haemoglobin, or red coloring matter, which the corpuscles, one of the solid elements of the blood, contain.

Red corpuscles are not, however, the only constituents of this fluid of sustenance. The composition of blood is not at all simple. Indeed, scientists are still experimenting, trying to find out more about its various and peculiar properties.

Blood not only carries red corpuscles, it is made up of white corpuscles as well, together with blood-plates, all of which float in the transparent and slightly yellowish fluid known as the plasma.

The exact composition of course microscopic in size. It has been estimated that in a cubic millimetre of blood there are approximately 500,000 blood-plates.

Red corpuscles, although they appear to be round, are really biconcave, that is they have a slight central depression on each side. Their diameter is about 1-3,200 of an inch and their width about 1-3,000 of an inch.

The ability of these red cells to carry oxygen depends upon the haemoglobin. It is the iron in the haemoglobin the more bright the blood appears.

The white blood cells might well be called the "policemen of the blood". They are somewhat larger than the red cells, and their size and shape vary. These latter help in the clotting processes of the blood and in fighting disease germs.

The plasma of the blood is a watery substance containing in solution or suspension the nutritive materials which the blood carries as the waste products taken from the tissues. Among these latter are proteids, salts, extractives, sugars, fats and gases.

The discovery that, in 1822, discovered that blood circulates. Since then, not only has the circulation received attention but also the remarkable clotting abilities which blood possesses. Were it not for this property, hemorrhages, no matter how small, would never be stopped, and every individual would bleed to death.

The coagulability of the blood differs, however, in different persons. In a disease known as hemophilia, the clotting time of the blood is so unusually long that even a trifling wound a possible source of danger. Sometimes bleeding may even start spontaneously.

Heredity seems to play a role in many of the cases. It is a disease that always requires medical care.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

Diabetics eating from one to two meals a day, from carbohydrates (starches and sugars) is a most important consideration in the treatment of diabetes. Insulin treatment alone without dietetic control fails to retain the systemic equilibrium. The treatment of Type II Ion. diabetes differs so on a veritable carbohydrate "jag" with decidedly bad results.

RUDYARD KIPLING LOSES GROUND

Condition Not So Satisfactory as That of Yesterday

London, Jan. 16—(AP)—Rudyard Kipling lost today some of the ground he had gained toward recovery from the emergency operation he underwent Monday for a perforated ulcer.

"Kipling's condition is not quite so satisfactory this morning," said an official bulletin issued at 10:55 a.m. (5.55 a.m. E.S.T.) from the Middlesex Hospital.

The condition of the ailing author had taken a turn for the better yesterday and the hospital had announced at 7.00 a.m. today (2.00 a.m., E.S.T.) that he "maintained improvement after a fairly quiet night, sleeping peacefully throughout short intervals."

Governor-General Enjoys Trip

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Jan. 16— To Lord Tweedsmuir's collection of birds in Canada there was added today the stories of how Cobalt was stumbled on, how the Hollinger and similar mines were discovered at Porcupine, and how in the years to come the New Kirkland Lake field became a promising prospect.

Listening with every manifestation of keen attention to the Governor-General heard old-timers in the Canadian North-land tell how the unnatural difference vanished before the Governor's promptings and, at an informal reception at the Lake Shore mine early today, they poured out stories of blood in the veins that have seldom found their way into print.

The Governor-General and his party rounded off their fling trip to Northern Ontario by a visit to Timmins' underground. Yesterday it had been Noranda, the copper gold-silver producer; today it was Lake Shore, one of the most productive gold mines in the northland.

Governor-General Enjoys Trip

Kirkland Lake, Ont., Jan. 16— To Lord Tweedsmuir's collection of birds in Canada there was added today the stories of how Cobalt was stumbled on, how the Hollinger and similar mines were discovered at Porcupine, and how in the years to come the New Kirkland Lake field became a promising prospect.

Listening with every manifestation of keen attention to the Governor-General heard old-timers in the Canadian North-land tell how the unnatural difference vanished before the Governor's promptings and, at an informal reception at the Lake Shore mine early today, they poured out stories of blood in the veins that have seldom found their way into print.

The Governor-General and his party rounded off their fling trip to Northern Ontario by a visit to Timmins' underground. Yesterday it had been Noranda, the copper-gold-silver producer; today it was Lake Shore, one of the most productive gold mines in the northland.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied by Hagar and Crawford by Financial Service.

Pioneer of B. C. Development at depth at the Pioneer continues most satisfactory. Crosscut from the main shaft below the 14th level at intervals of 12 feet are all showing ore. Due to a distance of about 150 feet in effort to get clear of blasting from the shaft quality as good as possible so as not to cause interference with the crosscut operations. Ore formation inside the shaft itself. According to a recent report from the 100-ft. level the cross-cut was driven to the vein being a distance of 230 ft. From the drift on the 14th it was tapped at 385 ft. The vein on these two levels is very similar to that encountered on the 14th running a width of between 2½ to 3 ft. and assaying about an ounce in gold.

With the probable large increase in indicated ore as the vein is gradually opened up in the depth of 700 ft. tentative consideration is being given to the possibility of increasing milling capacity. With relatively little change the mill could be brought to a condition where 500 tons daily could be handled as compared with the present rate of 400 tons for the 24-hour period. This increase would most probably take place when cross-cutting to the vein to the 26th level is completed. While it is definitely known that the company is now in a very strong financial condition an increase in the dividend rate is not contemplated at present, the directors being of the opinion that it is better to maintain this comfortable position in case of contingencies. Indications may come in any large mining operation, but with an increase in tonnage with the resultant increase in earnings directors would unquestionably look more favorably on a higher rate of dividend payments (Mr. Holland and Co. Ltd., Vancouver).

Wayside

P. E. Ritchie, managing director reports from work at the property is advancing satisfactory, the ore passes are now being cleared and development work is proceeding. The latest report states that good shoots of ore containing free gold have been between No. 1 and No. 2, known as the 175-ft. level. The other is an adit, independent of the other workings and is known as the 150-ft. level. There is about 100 feet of difference in elevation between these levels and No. 3.

The mining market has shown considerable strength and activity and is attracting a good deal of attention these days. The optimistic attitude towards the "golds" is well merited when consideration is given to the underlying factors which have made for the buoyancy. The Federal Government intends to stabilize taxes for the mines for the next five years, so that the industry can go ahead with expansion policies without the revelation of unexpected increased taxation always inherent. There is a likelihood that a measure will be put into prevailing high taxes for the mines will also take place.

Impetus has been given to buying of mining securities, particularly the gold shares, by the prospect that the yellow metal is headed for higher levels. A price of $40.00 an ounce is freely predicted.

It is pointed out that with the Supreme Court ruling the Act as constitutional, thus precluding collection of the process tax, with a bonus bill and the United States talling as it will thus several billions of dollars, no alternative in sight for relief rolls, and with an unbalanced budget, the United States will have to embark on a policy of inflation, and one of the easiest ways this can be accomplished is by increasing the price of gold.

The United States today owns between seven and eight billion dollars of gold, or about three-quarters of the known world stock. By increasing the value of gold to $40 an ounce, more than one billion dollars would accumulate credit to the United States' holdings of the precious metal. This would go a long way in alleviating the pressing problems confronting the American administration.

In view of the above, it is not surprising that investors and speculators are showing a keen interest at the present time. Other securities that are likely to profit in the event of inflation should come in for more attention from now on.

Interscholastic Loop Opens St. Mikes Defeating O.S.D. And Albert Tieing Collegiate

Over 500 Students From Various Schools Watch Play

GOOD MATERIAL SEEN

League Will Operate Every Wednesday With Twin Bill

Joe Volzin's third period goal gave the green and white clad St. Michael's Academy students to 3-3 victory over O.S.D. seniors while the B.C.I. and Y.S. squad battled to a one all tie with the Albert College entry in the opening double header of the Belleville Interscholastic Hockey League played at the Arena last evening. The twin bill was witnessed by over 500 students and fans all of whom stamped their approval on the beginning of interscholastic hockey in Belleville. Both games were keenly contested and saw thrills and spills with no quarter being asked or given as the four teams battled to the last ditch for their Alma Mater.

Ely tying at their initial rally 2-2 to 3-3 win over Frank Cunningham's O.S.D. lads, the Irish from St. Michael's Academy moved into sole possession of first place in the senior series, with Albert College and Les Shiels' Collegiate squad occupying second spot, tied and the O.S.D. now trailing in the cellar. Two more games in the league schedule will be staged at the Arena next Wednesday night.

Trailing at the end of the initial frame of the night-cap affair by the score of 2 to 1, Eddie Schieder's "Irishmen" came from behind to knot the count in the second session and go on to win the last canto. Joe Volzin, the St. Michael's centre player, opened the scoring with a solo effort after seven minutes of play in the middle frame. Volzin stick-handled his way through the entire O.S.D. team to beat Goaler Norm Goss in. Green entered the count for the "Deaf Lads" one minute later, when he picked up Wallace's pass-out and rifled the puck into the upper left hand corner of the opponent's net. Graham put the O.S.D. squad in the lead with a neat bid after Goss had broken up a loose puck inside St. Mikes' blue line, and passed to Graham. Although both teams were travelling at top speed and displaying good brand of hockey, neither team play all during the second period, no score was in evidence until the 19 minute mark, when Frank O'Neill carried the puck around the O.S.D. net and scored it with a backswing for the tying goal. St. Mikes opened the last period pushing the offensive and kept Goaler Bill Bird busy. The scoring was in evidence until Joe Volzin broke away and stick-handled through the entire O.S.D. team to beat Goaler Goss from close in on a splendid solo effort for the ultimate goal of the evening. The O.S.D. team finished strongly and were parsely on the offensive as the final gun sounded.

Tommy Hughes in the Irishmen's net turned in a splendid effort, as did Coocelle in the opposite end of the Arena. Goaler Bird of the Irish looked the best of Coach Schrieder's forwards. Graham and Bozicki teamed well on the O.S.D. first line, but the feature of the game was the efforts of Captain Wallace and Green a trio of 16 year old kids tended only by Coach Frank Cunningham as his second line. These teen age kids gave a fine display of the game. Ryers and Hawthorne, backed well as did Poets.

Collegiate Held to Tie

When the Albert College and B. C. I. locked in a one all tie, all goals scored in this game were registered in the initial frame. After the second frame, when Burton whipped home McDowall's pass, while Boonyer added in with Lobe's pass to make sure of the tying counter about four minutes later. In this session the players showed lots more lack of conditioning than was displayed in the night-cap affair, but still a rousing third period finish repeatedly brought the fans to their feet as B.C.I. staged a hectic third period rally to bombard the Albert citadel, but Coach Bishop's squad rose to heights to stave off the repeated attacks.

Four goalkeepers were used in this game, each team trying two netminders. All four goalies covered themselves with glory by their commendable miraculous saves. Feelings ran high during both games with the result, that the game gave the spectators ample reason to exercise their vocal talents for their favourites on towards victory. As both Albert and the B.C.I. tried in vain for that second goal and victory, many thrills were packed up a loose puck inside St. Mikes' blue line, and passed to Graham. Although both teams were travelling at top speed and displaying good brand of hockey, neither team play all during the second period, no score was in evidence until the 19 minute mark, when Frank O'Neill carried the puck around the O.S.D. net and scored it with a backswing for the tying goal. CURRENT SPORT

Completing its third successive and successful year of enterprise the Belleville Game and Anglers' Association held its annual meeting and election of officers at the Y.M.C.A. last evening. The local angling group has expanded until today it boasts of nearly 140 active members and the accomplishments achieved by this organization alone have increased value of angling fishing to a large degree in this district. President J. H. Shortt gave a short resume of the club's activities dating from its inception. Mr. Shortt has capably filled the president's chair for the past three years and was instrumental in the forming and the incorporating of the association. The main achievement accomplish, by the club was the restocking of local waters by the Provincial government, with game fish. Local club members accompanied the government's representatives to the Trenton hatchery on two occasions and personally assisted in the restocking of the local waters. Each year the club operates contests among its members and last night saw nine different prizes awarded to lucky fishermen, who received honors for the largest lunge, trout, etc, as well as the best catch during the season. The Belleville Game and Anglers' Association is to be complimented upon the success attained in such a short period of time.

For the accommodation of junior hockey teams in the Owl League, the Industrial, Ki-Y and other local packsters' loops, we have printed score cards and left a number in the hands of Manager Geo. Gay of the Arena. The idea is quite simple, all that is necessary is for these local managers to call at the Arena and secure the desired publicity. All that is necessary to procure one of these printed score cards from Manager Gay and after the game phone it in Mr. Gay says the rest will be taken care of until the result of the game appears in the local paper. Incidentally score games, such as friendly hockey games between the barbers and the firemen, will receive the same courtesy and attention as regular league fixtures, if the team heads get co-operate with the Arena officials. Manager Gay informs us that deadheads have already been tampering with the leaf in the Arena and caused damages to the amount of nearly $40.00 recently. This practice continues the Arena officials are threatening police action.

Skate-ups are coming thick and fast in the Quinte district these days. First the famous Cook Bros.-Boucher forward line of the Rangers was taken up then the report of the return to the ranks of the Americans of "Red" Doran was announced. Yesterday "Flash" Hollett, Toronto Leaflet, was sold to Boston (Art Ross had his eye on this lad for some time by the way), and then the trading of Conacher, of Chicago to the Rangers for Earl Seibert. Just which team benefitted in this latter deal remains to be seen, however. In the matter of "Red" Doran, the local youth, who made good in the moncpred ranks, it must be admitted the ex-Belleville youth has had a colorful and varied career since signing with the Americans four years ago. "Red" has been up and down the river so often that he has a permanent reservation on the trains between the Can.-American loop and the big tent. Incidentally those colorful Canadiens seem to be breaking up the N.H.L. dear old and also have a "kid line" that seems headed toward public recognition.

There's an old saying—"you can't keep a good man down". Jack Allen, who has sponsored softball and hockey in city loops up around the district for these many years past, has branched out in a new line, we hear. Jack is in business for himself as proprietor of the Superior Cleaners.

Peterboro may be some pumpkins in a hockey sense with their impected lineup but it just seems that while on every break the "Redmen coached by Eddie Thomas may take the Little Five over here on Friday night. One thing sure is, spectators that drop over to the Arena will get plenty of thrills because Peterboro and Belleville have a couple of lins of sport were not just exactly kept in. It seems that the packed up lineup, that was taken to Peterboro for the game last Friday night gave the boys from the north a sweet going over for the first twenty minutes of play and the score should be remedied. Coverly was held off the score sheet and while "Red" Geddes was given a good going over by Earl Medonald on the defence. Eddie Thomas has had his charges and every night they are out to get a win. It will be a swell game so come over and give the boys a lift. No doubt they will be plenty of arguments.

Industrial League hockey will hold the limelight at the Arena tonight with a triple header in Prentice-Jack Wilson's loop. The draw for tonight's games starting at 8.30 p.m. is St. Andrew's Men's Club vs. Bayview, Y.M.C.A. vs. Canadian Sargent and the Amalgamated Bankers vs. Corby's. The games will be played in succession as indicated ect.

After many weeks of labors "Duke" Smith has finally launched the Bay of Quinte Hockey League into clear sailing with Marmora, Trenton, Picton, and the Belleville Yacht Club as the contesting clubs. The league is scheduled to open in Picton on Friday night, when the local "sailors" supply the opposition for the Prince Edward County squad.

Senior Intermediate hockey was introduced to Belleville hockey fans at the Arena last evening and enjoyed marked success. The results of the games do not mean a much, after all is said and done, it is the calibre of hockey and the rivalry, that the fans are paranoeuvred to witness. In all four teams, Albert, St. Mike, O.S.D. and the Collegiate possess a wealth of hockey material in the way and their willingness to battle to the last ditch is also impressed the customers. Many of the players on the four squads are still in their early teens, but they showed sufficient promise last night to assure the league of increased patronage in weeks to come. Although St. Mikes were the only squad to emerge with a win, the real credit all rear teams put up a sterling battle and a high calibre of high school hockey is assured the patrons of the game each Wednesday night providing the teams continue to improve as the league progresses.

Only one-team put on an appearance at the Arena for the scheduled league game in the local Owl League last night and naturally the game was postponed. At the present moment the Arena management is over-flooded with matches and dates for hockey games. "It looks as though Belleville is suddenly hockey-minded, that is judging from the ever-increasing applications for playing hours," lamented Manager Gay today. An effort to start the Owl league team is strenuously being made.

Walt Gerow's Squad Has Too Much Power on Front Line

GAME QUITE FAST

Both Teams Show Some Smooth Passing Plays

Trenton, Jan. 16.—(Special)—Wall Gerow's Napanee Intermediate O.H.A. "B" aggregation again downed the Trenton Whittalls at Napanee, Wednesday night by a score of 8-3. Too many Wilson's for Whittalls as the name of the Whittall's defeat. The game was fast from start to finish and real sportsmanship was shown by all players as few penalties were handed out. The Napanee line went down into the Whittall defence time after time, manipulating some smooth passes scored on Grey in the Trenton net. Only that the latter showed sufficient promise last night to assure the league of increased patronage in weeks to come. Happy Men are Here Again!

THE RESPONSE to our offer of TWENTY PER CENT. DISCOUNT on our large line of WINTER OVERCOATS, was quick and numerous. We fitted many to a T and all were pleased and surprised that such fine overcoats could be sold at such reasonable prices. The reason is we do not care to carry over any stock—our stock must be changed constantly.

The offer of TWENTY PER CENT. DISCOUNT on Overcoats still holds—there are excellent buys, on account of the immense stock we always carry.

John L. Sullivan, world's heavyweight champion from 1882-1892 visited England in 1897.

Many a pugilist who has been honored by a chance to visit a prince of the royal household. John L. Sullivan was the recipient an invitation.

But John L. was having a good time. He was busy. So he told his manager to tell the prince, "I'll see him when I'm not so busy."

No one dared to write such a note to royalty. The refusal was kept quiet. Later John L. met the prince, Edward.

On the day he was to visit the prince (Prince Edward, later King Edward VII) John L. arrived 20 minutes late. When he got before the prince John L. gripped his hand in a grasp that made it ache for days and said: "Pleased to meet you, Prince. I've often heard of you."

"I am glad to meet you, Mr. Sullivan," said the prince, raising his hand and wincing in pain at the grasp.

"And I'm glad to come and oblige you," John L. replied, raising his hand and wincing in pain—to the horror of the lords and other dignitaries present in waiting, barehaded. "Sorry I was too busy to come when you first asked me!"

OFFERS JACKSON AT BIG FIGURE

By The Canadian Press

While Trenton remains content to slow along the National Hockey League front two of the circuit's best defencemen may be on the teams tonight as Art Coulter switches from Chicago Hawks to New York Rangers and Ear Siebert moves from Rangers to Hawks.

Conny Smythe threatened something more sensational than the Coulter-Siebert deal, however, when he let it be known Harvey Jackson, ace left wing, was on the market. But the Leafs' pilot soon was his announcement was made, to stir Jackson out of his recent slump.

OLYMPICS SCORE AN EASY VICTORY

Defeat Moncton 8-5 Without Four of Regular Lineup

Moncton, N.B., Jan. 16.—(CP) After trouncing all all-star New Brunswick outfit, 8-5, Canada's Olympic Hockey team left today for Montreal for their last exhibition game before sailing overseas.

While the Olympics were advancing toward a team picked up from the Halifax Independent and Canadian Amateur Hockey Association officials travelling with them were holding a box with the executive of the M.A.H.A. over the situation of their withdrawal from the National line-up. It was understood that Moncton, with a hundred closed doors after the game and the C.A.H.A. Representative would explain just why Ferguson, Mosher, Lawlor and Buker were dropped from the select team in Toronto.

Although playing without Herman Murray, Ralph St. Germain, Hugh Farquharson and Kenny Farmer, Olympics led the locals 2-1 at the end of the first period and skated away from them in the second to make it 7-2. They took things easy in the third session and with a score close to their total, while the New Brunswickers eagerly ran their count up to five.

Little World Series In Hockey Proposed

St. Louis Jan. 16.—(CP)—Frank Ruppenthal, owner of the St. Louis Flyers of the American Hockey Association, was en route today to Windsor and Montreal, where he will attempt to arrange a hockey battle World Series.

Ruppenthal has had in mind a minor league championship play-off series between the International, American and Canadian-American circuits.

He expected to confer in Montreal with Frank Calder, president of the National Hockey League, with whom he began negotiations last month for the series.

Louis Awaiting Call to Action

(By William Weeks)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

St. Louis, Jan. 16.—(AP)—Joe Louis sat around today waiting for the call to action, which for 27 months has been the Chicago stadium, Charley Retzlaff sat and listened to a familiar refrain.

It goes something like this: "The first guy who gets right out there and slugs with Louis will beat him".

Whether there is anything to it remains to be determined. Retzlaff's advisers sought to convince Louis' foes, however, that only chance with Louis lay in making a fight of it. He, like Louis, was finishing today with the physical

When the Montreal winners of the Stanley Cup series leaves were over bag and baggage by Montreal Maroons, it was one of the largest hockey deals in N.H.L. history. The big red team had acquired professional status by the simple enlargement of championship puck-chasing talent. But in 1935, only three of those Allan Cup champions are still in the big league race. New York Rangers have two of them—Montreal Canadiens the other.

One of the Ranger pair is Glenn Brydson, the blonde right winger who at times takes up a place on the Rangers' forward line. At times he has starred there this season, and the forth, which once was believed reserved for Cecil Dillon, may go to Ranger Brydson if he ramps up his scintillating play.

Rangers got Brydson only this year, in the break-up of the St. Louis Eagles and when he donned Patricia livery he rejoined Coach Davie Kerr, who was his pal of the Allan Cup trail and later with the Maroons.

In his early days as a Maroon, he saw some minor league hockey, turning out with Windsor upon occasion, but when a right-handed shot was needed up front in the N.H.L. club, a hurry-up call was dispatched for Brydson. That he began to touch with hockey as it is played in the Calder loop and with Rangers this year looks to have "arrived" for keeps. Cottrelle to Kerr, Ranger ace, have Harold Starr, another former Maroon, on their list. Glenn may think he's right back in Morrisville.

SLUM CLEARANCE URGED BY LABOR

Maintenance of Peace Advocated at Congress

Ottawa, Jan. 16—(CP)—Larger appropriations for public works, level crossing elimination and reforestation; extension of the housing act to include slum clearance, as well as other measures, featured opening speech and increased old age pensions were some of the recommendations laid before the government today by the Canadian Labor Congress of Canada and its affiliated bodies.

Contributory Unemployment insurance, health insurance and pensions for the blind, Federal administration of all relief, and replacement of relief camps by work with fair wages were urged as measures looking toward social betterment.

Renewed objection to Section 98 of the Criminal Code was emphasized and its repeal recommended but the government was asked to take all steps necessary to prevent growth of factions who would support the communistic form of government with dictatorship.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King and members of his cabinet received the annual delegation of labor representatives, was headed by President P. M. Draper and Secretary R. J. Tallon of the Congress.

Maintenance of peace by every possible means was urged and the government was asked to said to any move to nationalize traffic in arms implements, supervision of the work of the League of Nations Abolition of all grants for cadet training was asked.

The delegation endorsed the proposal to make the Bank of Canada a publicly-owned institution instead of privately-owned as it is now constituted.

Public works had given considerable impetus to re-employment but not sufficient and it was felt there should be larger appropriations and wider distribution to include renovation of old buildings as well as new construction and elimination of level crossings.

The Housing Act should be extended by provision of a larger federal appropriation and be extended to slum clearance. Reforestation was held out as a national need and as profitable re-employment measure.

A large number of names, including those of coal drivers, milk and bread delivery men and drivers of other horse drawn vehicles in the city as well as the signatures of residents of the ward will be presented on a petition originated and circulated by members of the Ward Street Debating Club to city council at its regular committee meeting on Thursday evening asking that the old fashioned watering trough in St. Paul Street between Pinnacle and South Front be returned to place.

The trough which has been in existence and almost in use for a period of over forty years was taken out about two months ago since then, it is declared, drivers of horses who have used the trough for a considerable period have suffered inconvenience. Residents of Water Ward have also used the trough for getting pails of water when their own conduit services had been frozen up.

Questioned today Mr. E. T. Austin, manager of the local waterworks department declared that a break occurred in the water service he trough underground and the water has been shut off for that reason. "It would mean quite a lot of work digging up and repairing that pipe so we decided that the work could wait until spring," added the manager.

Little Benny's Note Book

This afternoon some lady came to see ma with a skinny little girl named Clarice and I quick went up to my room and pritty soon ma came up, saying, Benny, I want you to come down and say hello to Clarice.

Aw G, ma, I cant. I wouldn't know what to tawk to her about, said, and ma said, Now don't be silly, you and Clarice must have lots of things in common, I mean you must like tawking the same things.

Well that are they for instants: i said, prod ma said, Tawk to her and find out, that's what conversation is for.

Me thinking, Aw heck, gosh thang the luck. And I went down and Clarice was all by herself in the front room looking at one of my Paul Peppy books, and I said, G do you like Paul Peppy books, and she said, No, I think he's awful, always travelling some other place and wanting to see some thing in the world. Why dont he stay at home and mind his own business like Dixie Dean and Her Private Detail's what I like in good books, Dixie Dean and Her Private, she said.

Thats because you dont know what good books are, I said, Do you like the Jungle Lore Series? I said, and she said, Those dum books. I should say not. I just read A Princess for a Day, that's a good book.

I looked at the pictures, that was enough for me, good nite, I said. Thinking G, we dont seem to like the same books in common, anyways. And I said, Do you like chocalit ice cream. I do, she said, D my I cant bare it, how can you have such taste? I always take vaniller, she said.

Thos stores how much you dont know compared to what you think you do, I said, and she said, And another thing I can stand is a pudding without raisins in it.

G, nelther can I, I hate it, I said, and she said, I dispise it like poison.

Making us both start to like each other, and we played lotto and parcheesy and had a pritty good ol time.

Proving you're just as libel to make frends by disliking things in common as what you are by liking them.

Rowland who also led the public reading in prayer. Mrs. N. Wescott, secretary gave a detailed report of the activities which took place at the previous meeting, and the missionary offering was received. The Scripture lesson for the evening was read by Mr. Fred Kyle and taken from the 19th. chapter of St. Luke.

Mr. Harry Lovibond was the speaker of the evening and gave a fine address on the pioneering of Christian mission work on that thickly populated Isle of Formosa. He spoke in high praise of the splendid work done in that particular field by Dr. MacKay who first began work there in 1872. The system adopted by this famous missionary in gaining the confidence of the natives has since been carried out in other fields, with marked success. Dr. MacKay though not a medical doctor had before his departure completed a course in dentistry and with this knowledge served to ease the physical pain of the natives first and then to gain their confidence. Mr. Lovibond outlined very clearly the many difficulties he brought by the way he made the task a great deal easier for the missionary in the years to follow. In 1895 when travelling into this country was called upon to face a great many dangers. While the hill tribes of head hunters were a threat it was many years until the work reached into the hills. Dr. MacKay began his work in the low lands. Christianizing groups of students who in turn were sent out as evangelistic work. In the early days methods of communication and transportation were very inadequate, when the doctor first entered the field it was sometimes months before he received any word from the outside world. But now with the use of motor vehicles there are fairly good roads in nearly every part of the world and the advent of radio communication serves to keep those in the far flung fields in constant touch with the homeland.

Missionary work is going forth with rapid strides on this island which though only about four hundred miles long and much less than half that in width has a population of over five million souls. Schools and churches have been set up in many parts of the land since the work began in 1885 and many native ministers and evangelists are sent forth each year into every part of the island. All the world is watched with greater interest than this one stated the speaker in closing.

The final number on the program was a vocal solo by Arthur Dunnett. Mr. R. W. Rowland accompanied him at the piano, following the reading registration which was taken to tabulate the number present. The attention was divided into groups and enjoyed the playing of several games. The evening was closed with the Mizpah Benediction.

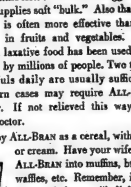
HALF-ALIVE from one to five?

It's EASY to see when another man is slipping. But it's harder to face it yourself. So it was with Jim. For months, he vaguely realized something was wrong with him. Tasks that he used to take in his stride had become a grind. He dreaded the afternoon hours most. Minutes dragged. Worst of all, it showed in his work.



Sluggish days are often due to common constipation. This ailment has helped to sidetrack many a promising career. It is a great enemy of vigor. Your pace slows down.

Most frequently, common constipation results from meals that lack sufficient "bulk" to exercise the intestines. So many people make the mistake of dosing themselves with pills and drugs that often do more harm than good. The real answer is to get "bulk" back in your daily diet.

Scientific tests show that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN supplies soft "bulk." Also that this "bulk" is often more effective than the "bulk" in fruits and vegetables. This natural laxative food has been used with success by millions of people. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. Stubborn cases may require ALL-BRAN oftener. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Enjoy ALL-BRAN as a cereal, with milk or cream. Have your wife cook ALL-BRAN into muffins, breads, waffles, etc. Remember, it furnishes wholesome "bulk." And also vitamin B and iron.

ALL-BRAN is sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

By Anne Forester

The bustling of the County Seat fizzing straggling business section down into low ground across the road. Block after block of shabby, dem-colored houses; the lengths of combined footpaths smeared on the slush that had once been white snow—Streets wheeling by. Red lights, green lights ahead. The shrill, distinct whistle of a crossing flagman, blocking the way. Red lights, green lights ahead. The shrill, distinct whistle of a crossing flagman, blocking the way. Red lights, green lights ahead. The shrill, distinct whistle of a crossing flagman, blocking the way.

New Year's Eve at the County Seat. Shrieks and crashing glass, and the wild simulation of horns, of whirling rattles, and hoarse but fetid-strewn human forms. People spilling out of doorways, milling about the streets, blocking the crossings, purposeless and aimlessly gay. A taxi-driver's curses and a woman's high scream, cutting the clamor like a knife. Traffic halts shrilling, where no traffic could move—even in this quiet, back-water town. New Year's Eve—with the surrounding countryside gathered to drum the old year away.

Presently, Jeffrey Therrold guided the car toward the Main Hotel; the girl beside him sitting rigidly forward in the seat, all of her straining ahead. How stupid it seemed—with so much that was vital at stake! The bewildering phantasy, the clamorous background, the repugnant composite that was a holiday note for these revelers, sounding a threatened death-knell to the hopes of the man, who strove with grim purpose to push on against that tide!

With a final skillful manoeuvre the boys car slid expertly into a cramped space by the curb. Jeffrey Therrold, helping the girl from the car, led the way into the Main Hotel.

The foyer, gay with revellers, with wallest and with the blare of Jazz Music, beating relentlessly against the sides of the tube that bore them, creakingly upward toward Suite 8 Stained, sticky panels of the closed door ahead, as they walked with jerky haste down the odorous narrow hall.

Captain Deering was in, the room-clerk had said. Checking out later tonight. His saddle was a smeared, crawling thing.... Rose's small fingers, clinging desperately to Jeff Therrold's arm, shoving him gently, wordlessly toward the door. ...ator that stopped beyond the desk.

Rose's heart pounding now, as she lagged hesitantly behind his purposeful stride. Rose's eyes staring over his shoulder into the interior of the room as the door of Suite 8 swung ajar.

Austin Deering, stretched out in a wicker chair, sat with his shining patent leather boots propped on a table before him. In his hand a long glass of some bubbling liquid, from which he hastily set down as Jeffrey entered the room.

In the corner by the window, huddled mutely into herself, Barbara Therrold sat as one stunned. Her pale face growing paler, the cry that rose to her lips a living thing. The table beside the wall was disturbed with glasses; she stole absentmindedly to stand still at last above the jiggered ash-tray and leaning bottles of liquor and ginger-ale.

"Well, Jeffrey! Only that you're short word; but the sound sent the girl on the opposite side of the room into a scrambling fury of hands to reach its side.

"Jeffrey! Jeff, did you know? ....Jeffrey, darling, you're come! You're come!

"What do you mean—Baby, listen to me; do you know—Jeffrey, I'm ending.... going away—away with this—man!

Brother and sister facing each other against the throbbing silence of the tawdry room. Heedless of the two listeners who stood motionless by, Rose Therrold, her hands clasping her throat, her head thrown against the wall outside the door. The man, Austin Deering, standing rigidly alert—one hand groping behind him toward the chair where his dinner-coat lay, forgetting that rakish smiling with about the floor. ...forgetting that he had come tonight not to ...rich he sought with such despe ...

All of the pent-up ...gis that followed a quest, hazy dream. Only Jeff Therrold's long stride, letting the barn boldly through the open door. Only his quiet voice, bidding Rose take away.... Only—and this seemed most unbelievable of all—Barbara Therrold's sudden, tragic eyes beseeching her wordlessly as she clung shrinking to the shielding her face against the arm of Rose's coat as they battled a slow passage to the door that opened foyer below.

"Oh, what will he do?.... Oh, dear God, what have I done? What will he do?..... Barbara's broken voice, Barbara's eyes, as she faded form shaking into the corner of her brother's waiting hand.

In the half-light of the hallway just as the speaking through Rose's ...hem. Rose had looked back into that room just once. Caught but one flashing glimpse of Austin Deering's crouching form, waiting beside the open ...ator door, his sinister like a faint, dangerous radiance wreathing it; derisive gokes on his face. All of it unable to cry out a silent warning as Jeff Therrold slowly advanced across the floor.

CHAPTER 26

"And I love you—!

Rose Therrold, with a ...ed breath, would have known just ..... as.....

Larry.... Ohhs-sound these past ten days. Larry, who would never again be driven down into low troubled eyes, gathering the tangled threads of her woes into the grasp of his sturdy hand. Strange, how the thought of him had come just now—how dearly the sound of his joyful, delighted laugh had intruded across the fretted patter of her thoughts.

"A man and a woman cannot be friends—unless they are more than friends!" he had quoted to her once, months ago. And, but they could! Larry was strong.... To be friends with a man like that man who had just gone into the Therrold house; to be friends with Jeffrey Therrold, was to be once again wrapped in a blanket of content that only friendship could bestow.

It was half an hour now since Jeffrey had entered his mother's house, leaving Rose sitting outside in his car. Gone in, with his arms about the drooping, broken pillows of the sister he loved so well.

"You won't mind waiting a moment—I want to take Babs inside.. ....And I want to drive you home, Rose—" Rose before Rose had questioned that word, from the lips of the man who used it now. Wondered from the depths of her sore, shaken soul where that home would finally be.

She stooped now to peer from the window in the door of Jeffrey's car at the house at the end of the drive.

Barbara's home.

Firelight throwing lancing shadows on the ceiling of the room beside the porch. On the gleaming keys of the open piano. On the careless glint of a satin cushion—fallen to the floor. On the twinkling prisms of the chandelier, the dim gold frames on the walls. Beauty.... security.... comfort.... peace. The arrow over the white-tiled doorway. That would be Barbara's room. Looped with soft drapes and white wainscoting and crystal jars. Barbara, who but a short hour before had clung with frantic hands to her brother's hard arm, sobbing: "Don't leave me, Jeff! Oh, please take me home!"

They had taken her home. Silent, crumpled in the rear seat of the car. Home to the Therrold house on the hill.

A Barbara who had danced to the tune the fiddler played, and was paying now for the dance. A Barbara who came stiffly around to the front seat where Rose sat, after Jeff had sought to lead her into the house. A Barbara who had raised a gallant, pitiful face to Rose; holding out a chilled small hand to meet the warm clasp of her own. A Barbara who had said—with what effort, only Jeff Therrold knew: "I'm sorry.... Goodnight. And thanks—Rose."

Muffled, bitter voices now, inside that lovely house. Voices and the sound of soft crying, as Jeff Therrold came slowly down the stairs to drive Rose Therrold to the cottage by the river that with all her thankful heart she knew was home....for her.

x x x

The window blind on the Bassett frontage jangled shook violently and settled into place.

From next door scrambled the chatteringly excited screams that shrouded the Slades' kitchen door.

Under the dim light of the child state, Jeffrey—Therrold's car stopped its gleaming, throbbing length before the Jeff Therrold's home. And Jeffrey Therrold, following the girl slowly up the hall, came to rest under the withered face of the frozen honeysuckle vine that bordered the small back porch.

New Year's Eve, and from the white shadows of the house, perched on the hill came the pulsating, languorous beat of the New Year's Ball. New Year's Eve, and another year trailing slowly over the edge of the world, dragging its numbing weight of old regrets, old memories and old resolves.

This, Rose thought, staring silently over the white, shrouded mansion straddling down to the river's rim, was what she wanted most in life. This little house, with its straggling picket fence. Her baby—her new work—and her friends. Friendship with a man such as Larry had been; only without Larry's ...mantic threat. Friendship with the sort of man Jeff Therrold could be— Her grey eyes watched him covertly through the gloom....

Jeffrey, she brooded, was a thousand leagues away; remembering that pallid New Year dawn when cars, the Saturday evening lights, warring with gaudy lanterns' flares. The child slender, the Chinaman black of the narrow Chinatown street. Cries of the water-vendor in the foreign tongue. Sampans, with shaws and palanquins, hooded carts and cars. Noise, confusion, and frantic color; crimson and saffron, under tinselled stars of a bejewelled skin drawn through the gloom. Clash of a cymbal, sound of a lute. Squalling babies, and the make-believe. And Harvey, her husband, part of that fantastic evil terror that was the Chinese night.

This year—only the peaceful silver river, flowing by her kitchen door. This year, her baby, sleeping under friendly eaves of a house on the threshold of an open door which might lead—Where?

The single gay figure, dancing in a Shanghai cafe with light feet and heavy heart, was dead. They'd, was no Shanghai Rose!

x x x

Jeffrey Therrold, hunching his big shoulders to shield his match from the little breeze, spoke softly into the gloom.

"Deering," he said grimly, "got his train to New York all right. I telephoned that hotel when I—took Babs into the house. He'll connect with his boat in New York and tomorrow I'll cable Shanghai. Which will just about wipe the slate for Captain Deering!

That—his own retribution had been swift and sure, only the hand wrapped in a silk handkerchief bore more tenderness. The girl, driving silently toward the cottage by his side, had felt that she did not want to know.

"You won't have to worry any more about him, Rose. You see—I've talked to Aunt Abby, and I know—"

"About—about—" Rose faltered and stopped.

He had called her Rose. She wondered whether he knew.

"About Harvey..... and that damned check..... and a lot of other things!" His voice shook a little; that sure, arrogant voice. But his eyes on her own were steady and deep.

"Larry Morgan," Jeffrey said softly, with an inflection she could not quite define, "came in to see me —just before I went away on my trip."

"Larry!" For a brief, startled instant grey eyes locked fast in the depths of black. Then the girl, with a restless, panicky movement, walked to the edge of the porch. "I see....."

"I wonder what it is you think you do see?" Jeffrey Therrold's voice went on.

"I see that there isn't much use in this world of looking for loyalty anywhere in one's friends! she flung out with a smothered voice. "—liked Larry. I understood him—" He arose finally, and voiced a long, low call. Then, after first feeding her, he squatted upon his haunches and devoured his own food. He ate the flesh raw, but slowly and with the same quiet dignity that marked his every act.

Again she tried to talk to him, but he made no reply. She could not know that she was addressing Tarzan, the English lord who understood every word she uttered, but who, for reasons of his own, preferred to remain a dumb brute to this woman whom he feared as an enemy.

The next day, when Zora awoke, Tarzan had replenished the fire and was sitting before it grilling small fragments of meat. Beside him were some fruits, which he must have gathered since he had awakened, how much like a lion he was, in his strength and dignity.

A crashing in the jungle announced his return of the English lord who understood every word she uttered, but who, for reasons of his own, preferred to remain a dumb brute to this woman whom he feared as an enemy.

The girl realized that the great brute had come in response to the man's call, and marvelled. As the days passed Zora's only appreciation was for the safety of Wayne Colt. Nor was her apprehension groundless.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE

"Whipsaw"

Myrna Loy, Harvey Stephens and Spencer Tracy in Romantic Adventure Drama.

Adventure and romance, drama and comedy are deftly blended in "Whipsaw", which brings Myrna Loy to the screen in her ace picture with Harvey Stephens and Spencer Tracy in leading roles.

The picture now at the Belle until Friday matinee daily takes its place among the more important new season screen offerings.

Seldom has Hollywood given theatregoers a more happily mated trio than Miss Loy, Harvey Stephens and Spencer Tracy. The latter has a role in which his delightful brand of egotism and bombast is tempered with an entirely human romance.

Miss Loy's characterizations gives her an opportunity for the wittiest lightness she first displayed so fetchingly in "The Thin Man" and which marked her as a vivid new screen personality.

"Whipsaw" is a story of "angles". Not only does the locale shift with lightning rapidity from London to New York and thence throughout many mid-western cities, but the mood and direction of the story shifts almost as rapidly.

The plot concerns itself with smuggled jewels, which Miss Loy, as a member of an international ring of jewel thieves, is presumed to have in her possession.

Tracy is a secret service man who attempts to trap her through romantic intrigue. He manoeuvres her into a situation in which she must pose as his wife, and the story moves swiftly through a chain of events which keeps excitement and suspense at fever height.

An excellent supporting cast appears with the stars. It includes Harvey Stephens, William Harrigan, Robert Warwick, Irene Franklin, Lillian Leighton, Wade Boteler and Clay Clement, among others. John Qualen is a new personality who scores a distinct perpetual triumph as a bewildered Miesehri farmer. William Ingersoll turns in an excellent performance as a country doctor. In "Whipsaw" . . . many critics call it Miss Loy's finest performance.

Excellent Junior Features.

An excellent array of junior features have been assembled for exhibition on the same program including a very funny Star Personality comedy, "Tank Vs. Tank Man", "Little Rover", a clever and entertaining comicolor cartoon, and "The Hour of Charm Girls" smart revue.

"Mutiny On the Bounty".

Proclaimed the greatest of all sea dramas, "Mutiny On the Bounty", opens Saturday at the Belle Theatre after being in production for two years.

Frank Lloyd, who filmed "Cavalcade" and the memorable "Sea Hawk", was the director.

Three of the greatest actors either on stage or screen head the cast of more than fifty featured players. They are Charles Laughton as Captain Bligh; Clark Gable as Fletcher Christian, leader of the mutineers; and Franchot Tone as Midshipman Bryan. "Mutiny On the Bounty" comes to the Belle Saturday after a record-breaking four weeks' engagement at Loew's Theatre, Toronto.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Mister Hobo"

Arliss is Knighted by King of Hoboes

Knighted! And only nine similar titles in the world!

Supreme Knight of the Road.... and George Arliss is the ninth and last. This honor was conferred upon Arliss by the famous itinerant organization known as "Hoboes of America," for his sympathetic portrait of a vagabond in "Mister Hobo," now playing at the Capitol Theatre.

"Hoboes of America" was organized in 1908 and boasts a membership of nearly a million. Among which are listed prominent men and women of every profession and walk of life. It is nation-wide in its reach, has its headquarters in Cincinnati, Ohio, and holds a convention every year.

The creeds of the organization is one of hopefulness to men who have taken to the road because of necessity. Jeff Davis carries a brief case bulging with tattered clippings and letters, some signed by presidents and governors, attesting to his aid in many a federal project.

Davis admits to an admiration of years standing for the art of Arliss and was especially pleased to have an actor of such fame and talent direct his attention to giving a true portrait of a true hobo.

A hobo has an exact definition, Davis claims. He is a travelling gent who is willing to work. And the greatest insult to a hobo is to call him a tramp or a bum, for they won't work! A hobo is a useful member of society.

And George Arliss is a useful member of society in "Mister Hobo." As a happy-go-lucky rolling stone he picks up many a quaint philosophy as he mends broken things, but then he becomes a banker through the mere circumstance of his name being Hobo Child, and he is confronted by the problem of mending broken hearts and fortunes and lives.

Maude Howell wrote the adaptation of "Mister Hobo" from a famous story by Paul Lafitte. Guy Bolton wrote the dialogue and Milton Roemer directed. In support of Arliss are Gene Gerrard as a fellow hobo, Viola Keats and Patrick Knowles as the heart interest, and Frank Cellier, Mary Clare, George Hayes and Henrietta Watson in prominent roles.

Also variety program of shorts including Buster Keaton in "Palooka From Paducah."

FAMILY PRAYS FOR GIRL IN TRANCE FOR WEEK—Shirley Tapp, 17, prayed so fervently at a revival meeting at Dearborn, Mich., that she fell into a "trance" from which she had not recovered after three days. She occasionally answers a question, will remain in any position in which she is put, but her expression retains an eerie motionlessness, without even the quiver of an eyelash, hour after hour. Calling it a manifestation of divine will, the family has not called a doctor, but continues to pray for her. Minister Doss Kilgore holds the Bible and leads the prayer. Father Lavegne Tapp and the mother, Mrs. Myrtle Tapp stand at the RIGHT. The children, brothers and sisters, are kneeling. Other relatives are standing around. Parents claim the trance will end on the seventh day.

GROWING UP TO FILL THE SHOES OF HOCKEY'S GREATEST LINE—Eventually hockey's greatest front line—the Bill Cook-Frank Boucher-Bun Cook combination of New York Rangers—will be disbanded through the ravages of time, but when they do clamber over the boards for the last time, there will be replacements ready to carry on their great names. Here is Bun Cook (LEFT), who has already shown a preference for the left wing alley which his father has patrolled for nine years. Also shown is Mrs. Frank Boucher, their son, Earl, and Frank Boucher, the Rivebirds perennial centre ice star. Bun Cook is at the RIGHT.

AMUSING INCIDENTS DOT ENGLAND AS THAMES RISES—The swelling of the waters of the Thames river in England by recent heavy rains, has caused inundation of large areas of the Thames valley and made possible this amusing incident of the flood a Maidenhead. Surf-board riding is a unique sport—for the highway.

"It isn't that we are not willing to pay high for wins we want," explained the Colonel, "but the other fellows seem to think that I've got a lot of extra money to burn since prohibition ended. Why, I'd go broke if I paid some of the prices they have asked for ball players."

Fantastic Price Tags

It was assumed the Yankee Colonel referred to the fantastic price tag of $500,000 put upon the services of Buddy Myer, American League batting champion and infield star, by owner Clark Griffith of the Washington club. Ruppert reputedly declined to pay a proportionately heavy price for Frank (Pinky) Higgins, star third sacker of the Athletics.

"There's still a possibility that Higgins, as well as Wally Moses, sensational young outfielder of the Athletics, will wind up with the Yankees. A's will wind up with the Yankees but not unless Connie Mack compromises on the prices asked or the Colonel goes the limit.

It isn't, that rival clubs are reluctant any longer to deal with the Yankees, who virtually were boycotted in the big league player markets after capturing six pennants in eight years under Miller Huggins. The fact is other American League club owners now fear the effects of a possible slump in the Yankee stadium. The New York club, to figure must be a consistent pennant-factor to insure general prosperity.

UNCLE SAM SENDS THESE SPEEDSTERS TO SKATE AT OLYMPIC GAMES—Against the two Canadian speed-skaters this United States team will be pitted at the Olympic Games with the North American rivalry their side issue. Col. J. Ruppert Refuses to Pay High Price Tag

By ALAN GOULD
Associated Press Sports Editor

New York, Jan. 16—(AP)—There may be additional bartering in major league baseball "ivory" before the boys start ganging up in Florida for the coming season but it's a bull market from now on, with no bargains in sight.

The upoff today is that Colonel Jacob Ruppert, perhaps the wealthiest owner in the major leagues, figuratively has thrown up his hands and conceded he can't, or rather, won't pay the prices asked for a number of outstanding players he would like to add to the Yankee lineup for 1936.

Ruppert's fortune towers above that of Tom Yawkey, the owner of the Boston Red Sox and baseball's most conspicuous spendthrift. The Yankee Colonel has paid millions for players who helped produce seven pennant-winning clubs in a decade. The deal for Babe Ruth in 1919 alone involved close to $500,000, including a mortgage on Red Sox property.

THE CHINESE OF SHANGHAI TAKE TO MASS MARRIAGE—And now the Chinese have taken the mass marriage idea from the Occident. Parade of the brides and bridegrooms into the temple grounds for the marriage ritual at recent multiple wedding in Shanghai is pictured. There were 130 couples knotted at the ceremony, and they are seen here, brides in one line, and grooms in another, in the wedding march.

BEEF CATTLE AND HOGS IN DEMAND

Annual Review From Department of Agriculture is Released

Ottawa Jan. 16.—(CP)—Greater production of beef cattle and hogs in Canada was forecast for 1936 in the annual review issued by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Further interest in sheep raising was anticipated.

As long as the prices of feed grains are low in relation to gasoline prices farmers will continue to do a greater portion of their work with horses," the report stated. A potential increase in the use of mechanical power might cause an over-supply of some types of horses. This potential increase would depend on improved economic conditions on the farms and in the cities.

A considerable trade in heavy work horses might be developed with Great Britain, the report said. A good demand continued for purebred draft horses in United States for breeding purposes.

"The export situation warrants increased production of market poultry in Canada," the report advised, "but there is not the same justification for greater egg production."

Dairy Industry Better

The Dairy Industry for the first 10 months of 1935 was in a more satisfactory condition, than for the corresponding period of 1934, despite a slight reduction in milk cow population, milk production might be expected to increase in the first quarter of 1936 as compared with the first quarter of 1935.

"The beef cattle market in Canada, and the world, was greatly influenced during the past year by the abnormal scarcity of fine and feeder cattle in the United States. Early in 1935, prices in the United States were relatively high to make possible the export of Canadian cattle despite the tariff. This exportation of cattle established a higher price in the Canadian market than would otherwise have been the case. This situation, associated with a good crop, strongly stimulated domestic demand for feeding cattle, and at the close of 1935 there were more cattle on winter feed in Canada than in recent years.

RAISED TO STARDOM—The sensational success of "Ah Wilderness" hailed as one of the hits of 1936, promises to do much for one of its better players, Ocella Parker, the ingenue.

DOCTORS CREATE A NEW INSULIN

Compound is Successfully Used in Toronto Hospitals

Toronto, Jan. 16.—(CP)—A world-wide study of insulin, patiently carried out by science over the 14-year period since Sir Frederick Banting and Dr. Charles H. Best of Toronto gave the diabetic treatment to mankind, had apparently borne fruit today with announcement of the creation of an insulin compound.

Sir Frederick and Dr. Best, it was understood were among the few to know, that four Copenhagen scientists had patented a compound of which the major part is insulin, designed to prolong the effectiveness of the treatment, while using smaller doses.

The Toronto Canadian doctors were the first to be entrusting with the new secret, too. It was announced late last night that Dr. Best, during a visit to Denmark had consumer, was given patent rights on the compound for University of Toronto, which he has connected.

For several months the compound has been used successfully in Toronto hospitals, although it is still regarded as being in the experimental stage. Neither Sir Frederick nor Dr. Best would comment on whether they had co-operated with the Copenhagen doctors in experiments.

"It is an excellent piece of work by the Danish doctors," Sir Frederick remarked. It has been known that the co-discoverer of insulin had not conducted diabetes research for several years, having turned to another channel of medical work.

London, Jan. 16.—(CP-Havas)—"Big surprises" are in store for all Britons when the Cabinet's National Defence plans are announced, the Manchester Guardian said today.

"Concern caused by German rearmament, while not recent, has been increased by the endless funds devoted by the Reich to its armaments," the Guardian declared.

Stone Axe Stops Papuan Speakers

Sydney, Australia, Jan. 16.—(CP)—Primitive but none the less effective was the method employed by Papuan natives in silencing garrulous politicians, according to Jack Hides, a member of the Papuan Patrol Service which has returned from an extensive survey of the native wild lands.

During council meetings, he related, an upraised stone axe provided an effective hint to any member of the tribe who had too much to say and promptly cleared the platform for the next speaker.

Elder members of the tribe were distinguished from the younger set by their beards. The young men were clean shaven, the sharing process, Hides said, consisted of picking out the whiskers with bone pieces of bamboo.

Act Essential to Industry Claimed

London, Ont., Jan. 16 (CP)—Prof. Archibald Leitch, chairman of the Board administering the Natural Products Marketing Act, in an address to the annual convention of the Western Ontario Dairymen's Association here, contended that the Act is essential to Canadian industry. He added that it is the constitutionality of the Act and not its merits which must be passed upon by the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court has only to decide, he said, whether the Federal Government has the power to pass and enforce such an Act. Prof. Leitch said last night. If the court decides the Federal Government has not such power, then the Provincial Governments have, and it will be up to the provinces to pass similar legislation.

In either case, said the professor, it lies with the Governments concerned as to how much compulsion may be used in carrying out the Act.

ELLSWORTH AND PILOT SAFE IN LITTLE AMERICA

Three British Battalions Arrive at Alexandria to Strengthen Forces

Explorers' Long Silence Due to Radio Trouble; Pair Taken Aboard Plane

Found Comfortably Encamped on Face of Ice-Barrier

HOPE HAD FADED

Plane Used Four Out of Gas 30 Miles From Little America

(By Frank E. King)

(Copyright 1936, by the Associated Press)

LONDON, Jan. 17.—A British radio operator, Vincent Hawk, from the Antarctic today word of the safe rescue of Lincoln Ellsworth and Herbert Hollick-Kenyon, long-lost explorers, found alive and well in the frozen wastes of Little America.

After planning the ice locking the Bay of Whales, a British Royal Research ship, the Australian Discovery and the Canadian Hollick-Kenyon safely landed there, having retained their fuel tanks. A bold projected flights across the South Polar regions.

Ellsworth has been taken aboard ship. Discovery is anchored in the Colonial office late today. The message said: "Ship's party returned with Ellsworth and Kenyon."

Damaged Radio

The explorers' long silence was due to a damaged radio transmitter, the British Government's Colonial office said.

A landing party from the Discovery II finally found them comfortably encamped on the face of the great ice barrier.

Not soon shortly after they took off on November twenty-third from Dunedin, New Zealand, had any word been received from the daring flyers. Hope for their safety was fading even abandoned by some.

A terse, seven-word message from the Master of the Discovery II ended this morning the seven weeks of anxiety.

"Ellsworth and Kenyon are both alive and well," said this message to the Colonial office, headmasters of the expedition aboard the Discovery's ward.

The message arrived after received a graphic, complete message from the Master of the Discovery II describing the rescue. It said:

"On first arrival in the Bay or Whales an aeroplane was observed with a tent was observed on the barrier near the description message reported.

"A rocket fired from the ship was not answered. A moth (plane) flew to Little America, five miles distant. Kenyon answered the rocket signal was dropped with letters.

"Kenyon landed and met the ship's party. He was received on board at 12.55 a.m., Jan. 16. He reported Ellsworth safe. Was suffering from a slight cold.

"The ship's party is advancing to meet Ellsworth.

"The message adds they ran out of fuel 30 miles from Little America, on a bearing of 165 degrees, and alighted in.

"Kenyon is very fit.

"A transmitter trouble caused the radio failure."

Eighteen hours earlier, a party called message had been received from the Discovery II, transmitting the two fliers had been found.

It was while still trying to confirm that message that the Colonial office finally received its two-word report that Ellsworth and Hollick-Kenyon were safe.

London, Ont., Jan. 17 (CP)— Kidnappers and alleged kidnappers of John Leslie Bell will all be in one room for a few hours here on March 11, 1935, and will be on display for placing a strong armed guard in and around Middlesex County Court House. They are ready for the "reunion" stage of the case.

Herman Kierdorff and Russell Ernest Hopkins, jailed here recently in Ottawa, Ill., will be present for preliminary hearing on charges of robbery with violence, kidnapping. David Mclaner, Mich'Carell and Mrs. Mary Kierdorff, all five jailed abductions, will be here as witnesses from Kingston Penitentiary.

It was learned today Provincial Police had made elaborate plans for guarding the five men and a mysterious fourteen man in the London newspaper office last night were discovered an official determination nothing would be left to chance.

Mysterious Phone Call

An unidentified voice told the London Free Press over the phone last night if Kierdorff was not freed after a pre-planned hearing Monday, his friends would "spring" him, it was said today.

Following the source of the call.

"We'll help him on the stand and he'll be in that trial to see that 'Herm' gets a fair shake," said the voice. "If you get off, we're going him and don't think we wouldn't do it for all your Chief plan police."

The man told the Free Press he was a friend of Kierdorff, former Detroit beer-garden operator, and owns beer for the court hearing. His name, he said, was Lindsay, but a director of London hotels failed to establish any such guest.

HAVE NO APOLOGY SAYS GOVERNOR

Reasons Will be Given In Due Course For Granting Reprieve

Trenton, N.J., Jan. 17 (AP)—Governor Harold'G. Hoffman in a formal statement today said today: "If impeachment is a price that must be paid for daring to follow the dictates of my own conscience I am ready to pay it."

The Governor said he did "question the truthfulness and mental competency of some of the chief witnesses for the State" (against Hauptmann).

He thinks that this crime could have been committed by any one man," he added. "I am very worried about the eagerness of some of our law enforcement agencies to bring about the death of but one man."

"I make no apology for granting a reprieve in this case," he continued.

He said he intended to give "in due course" his reasons for doubting Hauptmann could have committed the kidnapping.

Hauptmann, he went on, "to the best of my knowledge has made no confession and has offered to make none."

The Governor said a representative of a New York newspaper, "in my presence and in the presence of many others" had offered Hauptmann $75,000 for an exclusive confession.

"This offer was rejected," the Governor said. "Likewise, when Hauptmann was told that confession to save his life was to go before the Board of Pardons, he said 'I am guilty', and threw himself upon the mercy of the court, he spurned the opportunity.

"I am interested in the preservation of that thing we have rather proudly called 'Jersey justice' and I hope that real and full justice will finally be done in this case. A stay of a comparatively few days can not defeat that end."

A. THOMPSON IS FREED OF MURDER

Jury Only Out 27 Minutes Before Bringing in Verdict

Toronto, Jan. 17—(CP)—The lime bush murdery case, which created a sensation here in July, 1934, has ended a mystery today after Alwyne Thompson was acquitted by an Assize Court Jury of a charge of killing his son, Lewis.

Mrs. Thompson, young, auburn-haired, was found dead lying behind a lime bush just off Blythwood Road on the north fringe of the city. Her skull had been fractured with a stone weighing about five pounds. Her clothing had been torn. She had been ravished.

Thompson was arrested July 20, 1934 and had been in custody until yesterday. He served a 34 months term for perjury in connection with taking out a marriage license and declaring he was single, during the time his wife disappeared. He had been committed for trial and freed. He was committed for trial and freed the charge of murder the first time Thompson was tried. The jury did not agree and a second trial was held, ending yesterday.

Leaving the courtroom yesterday, Thompson was introduced by his counsel, J. L. Counsell, to a young executioner, who might have been his hangman had he been convicted. They shook hands. Thompson told reporters he wanted to be left alone to get a new start in life.

BREAKS PAROLE GIVEN 2 MONTHS

Charles McCauley Wannamaker Had 18 Months Yet to Serve

Charles McCawley Wannamaker, address unknown, appeared in the local police court today charged with breaking parole granted him from the Ontario Reformatory. The information was laid by Mr. C. F. Swayze, Provincial parole inspector.

Mayor Wallbridge, who was presiding in Trenton, recently on a charge of theft. The accused pleaded guilty to charges and was given leave to return to the Reformatory and complete his remaining 18 months of a previous sentence and an additional two months when he appeared before the magistrate in the K.C.

Under the name of McCawley, Wannamaker was sentenced to a period of from six to 10 years in the Ontario Reformatory at Chatham last spring and was released on parole from there after completing his term. He was provided with employment on a farm near Frankford, where he used to reside. Later, however, he disappeared from that area and was found until December 5th, 1935, when arrested in Trenton for theft.

"What is your right name?" asked Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C, as the accused stepped into the witness box after counsel had declared a charge laid against Charles McCawley.

Well, that's my name all right, you see McCawley is my middle name," he replied, "but Charles McCawley Wannamaker," added the accused.

The prisoner will be taken back to the Reformatory by Inspector Swayze today where he will commence his unexpired sentence of 18 months and the additional sentence of two months imposed by Magistrate Wallbridge today.

"JAFSIE" NEED NOT CHANGE PLAN

Wilcatz Tells Dr. Condon at Cristobal No Reason For Reprieve Given

Trenton, N.J., Jan. 17 (AP)—Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon informed Attorney General David T. Wilentz today he would return immediately from the Panama Canal Zone if Wilentz desired. Wilentz replied there was no need. Condon left Kingsburg by train.

Also a message to Condon Wilentz said Governor Hoffman had assigned no reason for granting a reprieve to Bruno Richard Hauptmann and no new evidence had been called to his attention by the Governor or Governor Hoffman.

"Jafsie"

Cristobal, C. Z., Jan. 17 (AP)—Dr. John F. "Jafsie" Condon, a key figure in the Lindbergh Kidnapping case, arrived from the United States today aboard the United States Republic and said: "I do not know if I am returning."

"That night depend on any authority," the elderly former schoolmaster declared.

He did not explain what he meant by "authority".

Those who identified Bruno Richard Hauptmann as the man to whom they gave $50,000 ransom for baby ransom, left New York last week with his daughter, Mrs. Myra Hacker, in a private cruise.

Governor Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey, who granted Richard Hoffman a 39-day reprieve from execution, has declared he wishes to interrogate "Jafsie" on purported differences in his testimony at Hauptmann's trial and in magazine articles which Condon had written.

Mayor Wallbridge presiding.

Dr. Condon, who breakfasted on board the ship and read accounts of the Hauptmann reprieve, said only: "No comment whatever on the case."

"I came for a rest and I am taking it. I have no comment to make whatever."

Previously the ship's purser had said he understood the Condons would leave the ship today.

"Jafsie" was in the best of humor as he handled remarks with a dozen reporters for 20 minutes.

Germany Assured By Great Britain

As a result, it is stated, the hints have ceased to appear and German newspapers have dropped their campaign for termination of the Locarno Treaty.

KIPLING'S LIFE FLICKERING LOW

Condition Critical But Not Regarded as Hopeless Says Bulletin

London, Jan. 17 (AP)—Rudyard Kipling's gallant will keeps the spark of life alive today despite severe attacks at the hospital where he lay in a coma said the end approaching was a matter of hours.

A hospital bulletin at 1:00 p.m. said the British world's condition was "unchanged and still very critical".

It was disclosed a blood transfusion from an unnamed donor had been given Kipling during last night and oxygen also had been used.

The 70-year-old author was resting undisturbed in the hospital reported. A bulletin issued at 8:05 p.m. today said:

"While Mr. Kipling's condition cannot be described as satisfactory, it is must not be regarded as hopeless."

Lapses Into Coma.

Rudyard Kipling, his gallant gains temporarily thrown from an emergency operation lost, lapsed into a coma today while his wife, daughter and physicians kept a vigil at his bedside.

The noted poet and novelist became unconscious at 4:30 p.m. (12:30 p.m., Thursday, E.S.T.), and several hours later he remained in the same state.

The Middlesex Hospital, in the private Wimpole Street wing of which he underwent the operation last Tuesday, issued a guarded medical ticker, followed a series of dramatic bulletins throughout the night, indicating the author was sinking gradually.

Family At Bedside.

The 70-year-old writer's wife, the former Caroline Balestier of New York, and his daughter drove swiftly after midnight through the snow falling streets from their home in the hospital in the central district of the city known as "Old London."

They were called to the sickroom at Kipling's own with. They sat at his bedside while nurses patiently was completely exhausted and unable to speak, he recognized them at first.

The surgeon, Dr. Alfred E. Webb-Johnson, who had a shining room for a time, but also went to his patient's side when the first alarming edition became "very critical".

Dr. Webb-Johnson, during the hospital bulletin last night-Gray vigil, however, announced:

"There is still a chance that Mr. Kipling may rally."

30-DAY REPRIEVE STAYS EXECUTION OF B. HAUPTMANN

Governor Hoffman Bitterly Criticised For His Action

IMPEACHMENT ASKED

Hoffman Wishes to Question Condon on New Articles Published

(By GEORGE ROBERTSON)

(Copyright, 1936, By The Associated Press)

Trenton, N.J., Jan. 17 (AP)—Bruno Hauptmann's 30-day reprieve spurred a defence search today for new evidence and a bitter public hostility Gov. Harold G. Hoffman might question Dr. John F. Condon about his oft-told story of the Lindbergh ransom negotiations.

The Governor, who dramatically stayed Hauptmann's electrocution 90 hours before the appointed time, has expressed a desire to interrogate "Jafsie" purported discrepancies between his current testimony and a series of articles on the case.

Dr. Condon and his daughter, Mrs. Myra Hacker, were reported clock today at Cristobal, Canal Zone, their first stop on a southern cruise. He was expected to have read aboard ship accounts of the reprieve granted Hauptmann, Mr. Hoffman's name from him.

The reprieve period and the additional four to eight weeks required by legal processes would make it impossible for Condon to return here before the new date for Hauptmann's electrocution.

EARL BEATTY IS ON RETIRED LIST

Started His Career in British Navy as Cadet at Age of 13

London, Jan. 17 (CP)—One of Britain's naval heroes stepped to the sidelines today to-day after playing a distinguished role for many years in the navy.

Earl Beatty, who started as a cadet at the age of 13 and became commander-in-chief of the Grand Fleet during the Great War at the age of 43, reached the age limit of 70 today and was retired as Admiral of the Fleet.

The famous admiral won his chief fame during the Great War. He was in command of the battle cruiser squadron, a position second in importance to that of the commander-in-chief, Beatty led a dashing raid into Heligoland Bight before the war was a month old, sinking three German cruisers and a destroyer. In 1915 he commanded the British Fleet engaged in the Dogger Bank action and was knighted by King George.

In the following year, he reached the apex of his distinction as commander of the Grand. Despite heavy losses, he strove gallantly, although not successfully, to bring on a decisive action under Admiral Von Scheer within the range of the guns of the Grand Fleet.

France Missed Chance by Failure to Give Support to Hardy Sailors Who Preceded Cartier and Even Columbus, He Declares

Montreal, Jan. 17 (CP) — North Americans would have begin celebrated 30 years before its discovery by Columbus "had the French government given proper support to hardy fishermen of Normandy, Brittany and Basque lands," Prof. Raoul Blanchard, Harvard University, told Alliance Francaise, French-Canadian organization.

There was little doubt, Professor Blanchard said last night, "these fishermen saw this continent long before Jacques Cartier and probably at least 30 years before Columbus." FRONT WINDOW OF BAKERY BROKEN

Motor Car Goes Out of Control on Icy Pavement at Foxboro

Allegedly failing control of his automobile as it skidded on the icy highway, a motor car driven by Cecil M. Campbell of Tamworth, crashed into the bakery window of A. F. Weekes' bakery at Foxboro, badly damaging the front of the building late yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Campbell was proceeding southward through Foxboro when his automobile suddenly started to skid. The vehicle became unmanageable and skidded into the front of the bakery, crashing through a front plate glass window and proceeding into the front portion of the building before it came to rest against a large steel bread rack, which was badly damaged by the impact. The entire store front was badly damaged by the hurling force of the car. Fortunately none of the entire accident was the fast, that only the high front fender of the motor vehicle suffered any damage, while Mr. Campbell escaped without even so much as minor scratches.

Provincial Officer Sam Irvine investigated the accident and reported that considerable damage had befallen the bakery front and that Mr. Campbell, driver of the officer later stated that charges of reckless driving are pending. Now that investigations are over as few damages is still a mystery to those residents of Foxboro who witnessed the accident.

Brighter Future Seen as Fair Board Starts New Year Encouraging Reports Read, James Rather Elected Head When Annual Meeting Held

GOV'R. GRANTS ASSIST

Board Expects to be Free of Debt After This Year

Belleville Agricultural Society will enter their new year practically debt free, according to a firm conviction voiced in the twelve months just ahead. It was revealed at the annual meeting of the Society held in the city hall yesterday afternoon at which officers were elected for the ensuing term.

Following the resignation after an unbroken record of successful chairmanship during the past term by acceptance, Mr. Walter Ansley, president of the Society for 1935 relinquished his office to Mr. James Rather, former 1st vice-president, who was the unanimous choice of members for president in 1936.

The following other officers were also named on the executive:

1st. Vice President: David Thrasher.

2nd. Vice President: W. D. Reid.

Directors: Archibald Reynolds and Sidney Dawkins.

The secretary and treasurer will be named later by the fifteen directors, chosen, as follows:

as follows: James Carbuth, Dr. O. J. Reid, Chas. Symons, H. F. Pafield, Ralph Bonter, Walter Ansley, Walter Aseltine, Earl Bonter, Fred Storey, Wesley Gray, John Walmsley, Leon Walmsley, W. Brooks and Wm. Hanna. Mayor Harry Hill through his office automatically assumes the directorship. In the absence of Mayor Hill, Mr. Ketcheson and treasurer Ambrose Parks will act in their respective offices, pro tem.

Confidence Of Retiring Officer

In accepting the honorable position of president, Mr. Barber in a brief address asked only that the same support be given him that characterized the past year's effort of the individual members. "The job requires a good deal of time and a lot of energy and I'm not at all sure I've been carried on during the past year. The two secretaries during the period, when times have not been as good as they could be. But in the future I'm sure that a little of the upturn will be evidenced," added the new president. "I would like to see a second meeting would by held next month when the annual organization was given by Mr. Barber.

In opening the meeting, President Aseltine referred briefly to the activities of the Society during the past year. "It has been a far better year than at first anticipated," he remarked. He thanked Mr. Ansley as president of this organization during that term, I feel it an honor to have been asked to take a larger part to make it the success it has been. Everything was accomplished to fit in during the whole time and everyone has done their part in the same end. If they had not done so we would not be able to look back with the tremendous accomplishments."

"We still have difficulties, however, notably in connection with the labor situation," he continued. "It was felt by many, that it was not as good as it should have been and we are hoping for a better year but at the time it was the only thing we got—the best under the circumstances. I want the fault of the committee in charge, nor of the Board as a whole. To maintain interest in the fair it must be made better all the time so that the people will come and keep coming. It must be made better all the time to succeed."

Fair Board Not in Blame

"Among the horsemen there was also some dissatisfaction. But here we were held down by the ruling of the government that we hold back fifty per cent. This was evidently done for the purpose of seeing that the exhibitors got their money first and it was entirely out of our hands."

"The President," pointed out Mr. Aseltine, "is just a man in the chair; if he hasn't the directors' efforts behind him he can't do very much."

Taking in Belleville as a Class "B" Fair was the thing, which helped greatly during the year in the way of grants. It has been our aim for some years to make this as a Class A fair and during the last we were able to do so. It made extra work on the part of all, but we managed to pull through with hardly a hitch."

Past President Aseltine thanked his fellow officers again for the assistance that had made his work easier and paid particular reference to the assistance that had been given also by Hastings County Councillors and Township Councillors in the matter of grants to their work.

elsewhere in this issue, Treasurer Ambrose Dafoe called attention to the splendid condition of the finances of the Society this year. For the first time in a considerable period the Parks Board was paid for the use of the grounds, and one thousand dollars had been paid off on the Lingham note. It was pointed out.

"I've been treasurer of this Society for the past six years, and I believe I am safe in saying that this is the best report I've had the pleasure to read and present to you members," summed up Treasurer Dafoe.

In a brief address, Mayor Harry Hill extended the welcome to members of the Society on behalf of the city and expressed his willingness to serve on the Board during the coming term. "You have, and we have a city, but we want to carry on in this locality, but we are fortunate in having a lot of good workers to take care of things. This is the first chance I have had to serve on this body and I can only hope, that whenever anything is needed to be done. I will be told just what it is. I want to be at the service of the organization at all times," declared Mayor Hill.

Committee Reports

In the brief reports submitted by the chairmen of the various committees, Mr. Harry Ketcheson, chairman of the Race Committee took the occasion also to outline the reason for some of the trouble with the horse owners during fair time. "The people have a humped up notion Kingston and a lot of the horsemen took advantage of that. Anyone who didn't like to have half their money held back until they were all done through. Kingston didn't do this, but we had definite instructions from the government to withhold fifty per cent of the purse; we couldn't help it, there was nothing we could do but go through, however, after a heart to heart explained the whole thing to them."

"The money we are getting for jumping this year," explained Mr. Ketcheson. "As it has been we have had just what we paid out. But last year it was that fifty per cent thing that hurt. However, we decided to try and I believe we did right. It was only a few of the agitators who made the trouble."

Wm. Bamford, chairman of the Roads and Vegetables Committee, pointed out the value for self boosting midways as a means of attracting people to the grounds and helping pay the cost, of the annual event. "Probably about fifty per cent of those who came to the grounds never see a vegetable exhibit, and it is this class that must be pleased, even if many of us do not like midways as an attraction," he explained.

As chairman of Advertising and Attractions, Mr. Chas. Symons pointed out that last year the attractions committee were faced with a problem in trying to find something which would please the people. "We have to do this and we don't pan out as we think it should. Then we have to go to work and find something entirely different, This year we hope that we will have something more attractive and hope we will be able to secure something which will please and that will fit in with the funds we have at our disposal. We've got to give them something new each year to get them back day after day," declared Mr. Symons.

Finances in Good Shape

Mr. H. E. Fairfield, chairman of the Finance Committee, congratulated himself as highly pleased with the financial standing of the affairs of the Society. "This year we were able to pay off $1,000 on an indebtedness of $1,500 and we had a good business to do so. It was done without any pleasure of the people to think were very fortunate in being able to get this load off our minds. This year we hope to put another five hundred to pay. I want to pay particular tribute to the work that has been so efficiently carried on during the year by our able secretary Walter Aseltine," added Mr. Fairfield.

At least among the attractions during the fair was the Belleville Band, it was recognized by Mr. Leon Walmsley, chairman of the Amusement Committee. "The Belleville Band is worth every cent it gets for music and program that it has been giving pleasure of the people to listen to for years past. Their performance was more than satisfactory to the whole committee."

More Lighting Required

Mr. Fred Storey, chairman of the Horse Committee referred to the lighting system in the lighting system completely around the track, and pointed to the evening performances as a feature that is the main attractions of the fair. "We have a good track and a good stand, it was the only chance they got to see some horse exhibits, and I know that they were very pleased at this feature."

"There was something new this year and it was tried for the first time," declared Mr. Wesley Symons. "We received all kinds of compliments on the horse show and I want to publicly thank Mr. W. D. Reid, who was instrumental in getting the horses and he is to be worked faithfully on this and he deserves tremendous credit."

President Walter Aseltine, who was in charge of Buildings and Rentals declared the buildings to be one of the main sources of revenue for the fair. "It has never ed hard work to get those buildings filled and I am pleased that we had to work out a definite plan before we started. But the buildings brought in almost half as much as the gates did. They're something that we can run down. They were never filled to capacity before until last year, when every bit of available space was taken by the booths. This time we had all clear money" and I can only hope, that in the future this sec-

Mr. Fairfield pointed to the contracts designed and drawn up by President Aseltine as "a masterpiece."

"The exhibitors were all very well pleased with everything, and your president did a real job for the Society in this matter. Without the necessary may be, he will have to step in it to keep up with the performances that were given by him," added the speaker.

At a meeting to be held by the directors of the Society next Saturday week, further reorganization and naming of committees will be completed. The date of the meeting will be announced by decretary R. D. Ketcheson.

30-DAY REPRIEVE STAYS' EXECUTION

Gave No Reasons

The Governor did not amplify his declaration that the reprieve was motivated by "public interest," but he did not care to disclose at this time."

"I just had to do it," he said in New York last night. "It was one of those things that I had to do and I did it."

Hauptmann's legal forces, headed by Lloyd Fisher, who had found no opportunity to confer on new methods to save the condemned man, whom a third execution date will be set by Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, on application of Attorney-General David T. Wilentz.

Hauptmann Has New Evidence

Their sole hope of saving the Bronx carpenter, convicted nearly two years ago in the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh baby, is the newly evidence.

The one-sentence refusal yesterday by the United States Supreme Court to grant a Habeas Corpus writ to Hauptmann, on technicalities whom a third execution date will be set by Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, on application of Attorney-General David T. Wilentz.

Hauptmann Has New Evidence

Their sole hope of saving the Bronx carpenter, convicted nearly two years ago in the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh baby, is the newly evidence.

The one-sentence refusal yesterday by the United States Supreme Court to grant a Habeas Corpus writ to Hauptmann, on technicalities of further legal efforts except those that can be supported by new and vital facts.

Should such evidence be found, Fisher might go to the state of New Jersey and ask for a new trial or to the Court of Pardons for commutation of sentence.

The Governor's eleventh-hour intervention was made after hearing Mrs. Hauptmann in her hotel room, brought a call from the Trenton State Chancellor and Mrs. Hauptmann rising Times for his impeachment.

Governor Harold G. Hoffman has sacrificed all moral and legal right to serve as chief executive of New Jersey, by his intervention, said and thrown out of office," said the State Chancellor.

The papers, under the same ownership are independent politically.

Hoffman Is a Republican

Hoffman is a Republican. His party controls each branch of the legislature.

"Just a dream," Hoffman said to his newspaper friends.

The Governor said he would sign no executive papers that day, however, and send them at once to the prison where Hauptmann was to have been executed at 8 o'clock this morning.

News of the Governor's decision was received calmly in the death house. Hauptmann's lawyers arrived at short time spread as quickly by the time Hauptmann lawyers arrived at the prison. Fisher, who had been by-passed by statehouse, a crowd of 1,000 persons had gathered.

The prison population, learning what had happened over the prison "grapevine" took the cry.

Hauptmann! Hauptmann! reprieve! reprieve!" the prisoners were for him.

Of all those behind the somber prison walls only Hauptmann appeared most calm.

Hauptmann Deeply Touched

"He was deeply and humanly touched," said Attorney Fisher who talked to him. "He said he had had felt all day that something good would happen. He said he would step forward—to prove his innocence."

Mrs. Hauptmann, learning of the first break in her husband's favor, said: "I knew it would come out, that the terrible people, who did this thing will either come before the Governor or die."

She asked late yesterday to see her husband when she also had talked in the morning for what might have been the last time. Her request was refused.

Confers With Governor

Just before she left for the death home yesterday morning, she and the Governor conferred privately but both denied any mention of a reprieve was made or that the Governor told her he was to sign papers for a confession.

"No exploits," have asked that," Mrs. Hauptmann said, "because he know Richard has nothing to confess."

Attorney-General Wilentz, who prosecuted Hauptmann, issued a statement on the opposite side of the political fence from Governor Hoffman has consistently held the Governor lacked legal right to issue a reprieve, in the time limit of 60 days from the date of conviction having passed.

The Governor, however, has precedents to support him.

Wilentz declared, however, that there would be only one reprieve, "unless there are further developments to warrant another."

Stirling and District

Stirling—The Stirling Community Welfare Club held their opening meeting in the Community Hall on Tuesday evening with an unusually large attendance. The hall, which had been previously decorated by residents of the district by the school in preparation for the hockey club dance, was a very appropriate setting for the anticipated banquet provided by the ladies of the Stirling Women's Institute, with a wide and varied menu selected by the social committee under the leadership of Mr. Roy Segleton. During the dinner hour excellent music was provided by Wood's orchestra of Mount. Maurice Bell, Hugh Keddy and Reginald Madden on the community singing was led by Arthur Donagh with Maurice Bell assisting at the piano.

President Tom Solmes presided over the meeting and following the toast to the King, gave a brief address in which he stated "that owing to the fact that the meeting was the first under the direction of the new governing body he would call upon the new members of the executive to take charge and the various conveners for reports on their activities. The number of guests and new members were introduced by their hosts in the following manner:—Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Anderson; Gordon Cottam by W. Chaisson; Mr. and Mrs. Lorne Holmes by Burt Pinkle; Sam Danforth and Milton Reid, Messrs. Silo, S. Ellis and Mr. Wright, a number of guests and two other new members, Percy Bell and Mr. Dunsmore, were unable to be present were introduced by Arthur Donagh, Mrs. Ellis, Arthur Bateman, E. Ormiston and G. A. Wells were also introduced by their sponsors. All these new members and guests were welcomed by the president, Tom Solmes.

Following her brief remarks addressed to the member on his own behalf in which he expressed the pleasure he felt in being selected to the office of President for the forth coming year, he then called the roll on each member of the new executive for their remarks in the following order each responded in a very appropriate manner. Vice-President Clifford W. Baker, by Harry Lovibond, chairman of the Membership Committee, who proposed a total enrollment of over ninety-five members. Mr. Lovibond is chairman of the Program Committee stressed the need for hearty co-operation on the part of each member to make the entertainment of the coming season a success. Secretary son, chairman of the Reception Committee, Roy Segleton, chairman of the Social Committee also spoke of the fine co-operation he received from the ladies in the forming of the menus for the dinner. Mr. Fran Wark, who for the past number of years has contributed his talents to the entertainment of the community, chairman of the decorating committee also spoke briefly, and in the absence of Mr. H. E. Huiln, Dr. Edmund A. Carlton read a message from the personal attitude for the kindnesses received by him during his recent illness. Mr. Carlton was a part of the program was Treasurer — R. E. Bateman who gave a detailed account of the financial standing of the community.

The next matter of business dealt with was the revision of the Constitution which the Executive of the Committee appointed to the task of revising the same. Mr. Fred Bell, Mr. Fred Mallory, chairman of the Constitution Committee in connection with the executive, read each clause of the newly formed constitution which were accepted unanimously and then as a recognized Constitution. The next matter of business was the election of the following governing bodies." Mr. F. Mallory was the leader of the affirmative side and in the support of all those seated on the south side of the hall. Mr. Ed. Bateman was leader by those on the north side of the house against the adoption of the new question which proved very interesting as many of the members gave their views on the proposed constitution. Dr. H. H. Mger, Dr. E. A. Carlton and Mr. J. A. White were elected as judges and after a great deal of deliberation were unable to award any decision and the debate was declared a draw. Many public technical arguments were set forth in the sentence addresses given by Mr. Bateman, Mr. Ormiston, Reeve W. O. Weal, Messrs. C. N. Baker, F. Bateman, M. Hitch, Geo. Ansley, Geo. Lizery, Arthur Bateman, Rev. S. W. Rowland, Rev. Father Purcell, E. Murray, H. E. Lovibond, C. Seacord, R. W. Mattlejohn, Jr., Bateman, Roy Segleton, J. Morrison, Arthur Dunham, George Weaver, J. Sprague, Milton Bird, S. Danford, M. Reid, D. Williams, F. Ward, P. Soulis, W. Bateman, C. O. Wells, Cecil Macklin, W. L. Anderson and Harold Bateman.

Both leaders gave a fine display of oratorical ability in their final summary of the question and this somewhat unusual feature of the program proved very entertaining to all those present and also contained a wealth of information material. Several other matters of minor nature were discussed in a free manner by all and the meeting was finally adjourned in the usual manner.

Inaugural Meeting of Village Council

The first meeting of the Stirling Village Council was held in the Council Chambers on Monday evening with Reeve W. O. Weal in the chair and the following councillors in attendance, Jos. Whitehead, D. D. Birtch, R. H. Reid and Thomas Cranston. Town Clerk G. Lizery and Treasurer R. Bateman were also present. All present signed the declaration of Office and the business of the evening carried through in the usual manner. All offices and positions coming under the jurisdiction of the council were dealt with individually and in the most cases re-appointment of those who have served very well in the past year was recommended. Councillors Rollins and Whitehead were appointed to Fire Committee; and Councillors Rollins and Whitehead appointed to Property Committee. Mrs. J. McC. Potts was appointed to the Library Board. Mrs. J. A. Patterson was appointed to the Board of Health and Mrs. J. A. Patterson to the Board of Education. Mrs. Jas. Lagrow Auditor. Mr. Jos. Whitehead and Mr. W. Mekilejohn were appointed as municipal welfare committee. Mr. Clifford Baker and Mr. H. E. Hulin and Mr. P. Mallory were appointed auditors. All other offices and positions within the village remain the same as last year and all outstanding accounts were ordered paid and the meeting was then closed.

Farbere and West Huntingdon Win Games in Hockey Playoffs

Scores lower as teams in the Centre Hockey loop fail to find the range. Scores down yet to last year's champions have yet to score a single goal in the playoffs while the tall-enders of last year are stepping out in front. Consequently, are slow starters and last year won four games in a row to make the finals.

Past keen hockey is thoroughly enjoyed by the large crowds of fans who take in these games. Last night's three games found Farbere and Bethel together in an evenly fought game which was won by Farbere by a one-goal margin, the only goal of the game in the first period.

MISSING EXPLORER

Relatives of Hollick-Kenyon in London had given up hope two weeks ago for his rescue.

His aunt, Mrs. H. V. Kenyon, wife of the Mayor of Paddington, said: "We thought six weeks was the limit. We had no news and feared the worst.

The past few days ago, my husband wrote Herbert's mother in Canada, consoling her for the loss of her son."

Delighted at the news the men were found, Admiral Sir William Goodenough, former president of the Royal Geographical Society, asserted:

"That shows what enterprise can do when carried out with forethought."

Rejoice at News

Pointing out it was often difficult to communicate by wireless from the South Polar regions because of atmospheric conditions, Admiral Boyd, commented on the meagre news:

"The whole world will rejoice to know that these two brave men have come through safely."

First word, that Ellsworth and Hollick-Kenyon, objects of an intensive search, night at last have been found came with receipt of a message yesterday from the Discovery II it had sighted an airplane and was on the Bay of Quinte.

Neither the airplane nor the man, however, was then discovered, announcing the first word of the missing men, and in a statement.

"A message has been received by the Search Committee from the Master of the Discovery II reporting that the boat arrived safely at the City of Whales at 10.00 p.m., Jan. 15. The message indicates one man was sighted from a plane and also a machine at Little America.

The Colonial office then issued this statement today:

"A further message has just been received from the Master of Los Discovery, reporting Ellsworth and Hollick-Kenyon are both alive and well.

The Australian Minister of Defence announced at Sydney New South Wales, receipt of another message from the Master of the Discovery II, saying efforts would be made to take aboard a man sighted near Little America.

Messages Sent

Prime Minister Lyons of the Australian Commonwealth which sponsored "the Discovery's voyage with the British Government, sent a message of congratulation to the Captain of the vessel.

Hugh R. Mill, London meteorologist, commenting on the announcement said:

"It is an extraordinary coincidence that exactly two years ago the Discovery went to the rescue of Admiral Byrd, getting a doctor to him from New Zealand.

Where she has been able to save the lives of another American explorer and his British companion."

The Discovery carries two airplanes, fitted at the expense of the Australian Government, several floats and a number of sledges, which would be hauled by men, if necessary. The ship rought no dogs.

The Discovery, returned from the Falkland Island in the South Atlantic, was strengthened for polar navigation. She is a steel schooner of about 1,000 tons.

ARKANSAS AIR CRASH

Mankind is always shocked by sudden death especially in accident, for it is nature in him which makes him cling to life with a tenacity which assures the continuance of the race.

The disaster which on Tuesday night claimed seventeen lives, the entire company who were on board the giant Douglas liner flying over Arkansas was one which has stirred everyone who has thought much of the place of travel in modern air machines.

So far no known cause of the crash in a swampy marsh has been determined and there may never be a complete explanation of the tragedy.

In spite of the tragedy air travel will continue until the flying is practically safe. As it is today the losses are rare, but of course they are striking.

NATIONAL LOAN COUNCIL

Agreement of the treasurers of the Provinces that there should be some control of provincial financing is looked upon by very many as a progressive step. One of the lessons which has had to be learned in the bitterness of the depression is this matter of borrowings. The Dominion has been hard pressed through the demands of some of the provinces for loans. Today through relief and other factors the provinces are largely under the Federal authority. Co-ordination is seen as the natural consequence of the experience of the past few years. Under the proposed plan there will be provincial finance councils, the possibility of provinces acting quite independently of Ottawa seems to be growing more remote.

It may be that there will in time be provincial control of the loans of municipalities for Ontario knows too well what over-expansion and over-expenditure have caused in trouble in this province.

WHAT FIRES DO

Smokers' carelessness caused the greater number of fires, namely 12,844 in Ontario as against 5,367 started by stoves, furnaces, boilers and pipes, but the loss from the latter was about fifty per cent higher, namely $3,283,267 as against $2,153,093 loss from the carelessness of smokers. Defective chimneys and flues caused 2,996, electric wiring and appliances 2,872, hot ashes and coals 2,074, sparks from chimneys on roof 1,731, portable lamps, lanterns and open lights 1,382. Out of a total of 43,622 fires in Canada in 1934 lightning caused 987 with a loss of $637,402, while 8,670 fires were unknown causes. The total fire loss was $25,437,840.

The large total of children is remarkable. News reports as they appear of fatal fires indicate this total in advance for it is often that the tragic story comes that the children are lost.

Those who are inclined to place blame on spontaneous combustion for many fires are informed that only 176 out of the 43,622 are attributed to that cause.

In the year under question the total insured value of property was estimated at nearly ten and a half billion dollars, the loss averaging 19 cents per $100 of value. The rate of premium per $100 of value insured was 72 cents. The per capita fire loss was $2.44, the average for Ontario being somewhat lower than the Canadian average, namely $2.17.

Interesting figure is that rural districts bore nearly fifty per cent of the 1934 loss with a loss of $2.44 average. The village losses averaged $5.96 per capita for a total of $3,076,584 loss.

But the loss included something more precious than property. In 1934 there were 58 men, 81 women, and 134 children burned to death, a total of 268. For the ten years 1925-1934 the fatalities totalled 3,016.

TORONTO TO VOTE EARLY

Toronto council has joined the councils of other municipalities favoring the annual elections of the municipality in early December. Toronto has a reason for the polling in the last voting was only forty per cent according to report. The new date of elections which has to be passed by-law will it is expected bring out more voters than on New Year's Day. It is likely that Toronto will vote from noon to nine o'clock in the evening in order to give everyone a chance to cast the vote.

PENETANG PROBE INTO FIRES ENDS

Fire Marshal Will Issue Report in "Due Time"

Penetanguishene, Ont., Jan. 17.—(CP)—Ontario Fire Marshal W. J. Scott today began a study of evidence taken at intervals since November in preparation for report he will make in "due time" on a series of fires in this area affecting the interests of J. T. Payette.

In all the commissioner heard evidence concerning 16 fires which occurred during the past ten years. Arising out of them were insurance claims totalling $250,000.

The inquiry, resuming yesterday, after halting December 10, ended after Joseph Sedgewick, K.C., counsel for the Fire Marshal's department, had called only a few witnesses.

Lorne Noble, Jr., 17, said he saw a car containing two men near a warehouse the night Payette's pattern shed burned.

Everybody having one except Pude Simkins, and me having a cutter one to lend him, making 4 cutters, and when the ashmen got down to us one of them said, Hay, hop off of that spring, what's the idear of cluttering up the back street with that thing?

Being a wide ashman with a red mustash, and Skinny Martin said, We've took up a collection for you, mister, I mean if you dont take our spring. This is a jumping club and we need it, he said.

How much is in the collection?

Little Benny's Note Book

The Flying Trapeze Artists was feeling sad on account of Shorty Judge's mother making us take our bed spring out of her yard, and we was jumping up and down on it kind of disheated out in the back street, and Skinny Martin E. said, Here's the ashmen, goodbye spring.

Let's take up a collection to bribe them, I said, and Shorty said, Sure, and then maybe they'll make believe they dont see it every time they come around, so it'll stay here forever. I've got a cent to put up if everybody else does, he said.

Everybody having one except Pude Simkins, and me having a cutter one to lend him, making 4 cutters, and when the ashmen got down to us one of them said, Hay, hop off of that spring, what's the idear of cluttering up the back street with that thing?

Being a wide ashman with a red mustash, and Skinny Martin said, We've took up a collection for you, mister, I mean if you dont take our spring. This is a jumping club and we need it, he said.

How much is in the collection? the 2nd ashman said. Being a narrow ashman with wide feet, and skinny said, 4 cents.

A fortune, the first ashman said, and the 2nd one said, We'd be crazy to take it after like that. It's tawk it over, Dave.

And they started to whisper to each other and then the first one said, I tell you how it is, kids. We need that spring more than you do. You kids get a lot of jumping during the day, but how about me. Our only exercise is heaving barrels and climbing up and down on and off the truck, but no actual bumping. So we took a collection too. Here's 3 cents, that's considerable dough for 4 kids that's got 4 already, he said.

And he gave it to us saying, Come on, Mack, let's get going.

With they did with the spring, us fellows feeling partly worse and partly better.

Tweed and District

Tweed—Dr. W. A. Paul was elected president of Tweed Horticultural Society at the annual meeting held in the Council Chamber on Wednesday evening January 14th. The meeting was presided over by F. B. Hubbard, president for 1935. A communication was read from Mr. J. B. Nicholson, the district director of the Ontario Horticultural Society, announcing the appointment of a delegate to the annual Horticultural Association Convention to be held in the Royal York Hotel on February 13th and 14th. Rev. R. E. Nicholson was unanimously appointed delegate to represent the local organization.

The treasurer's report showed total receipts of $261.23 and total expenditures of $167.86 leaving a cash balance of $6.15. During the year the society had a membership of 49 which compared very favorably with those years when membership were lower. The new departmental grant amounted to $15.37. Reports indicate that no grant whatever may be received in 1936 owing to the possibility of the government eliminating all grants for horticultural societies. (The grant for 1935 totalled $600.00 for the province).

In his presidential address Mr. Nicholson noted the remarkable advance in the growing of flowers in Tweed during the past few years. More people are interested every year growing a greater number of varieties and a better grade of flowers than ever before. The greatest individual improvement during the past year was that accomplished by Mr. Geo. Young who turned a weed patch along part of the Township Hall into a beauty spot. The Society plans to improve the ground along the remainder of the Hall and also along the hall. Appreciation was expressed to the Town and Council for the assistance they had given the Society in their efforts and in the matter of labour. The president felt that some financial assistance might be received from the Park Board if the value of the Society's service was impressed upon them. Mr. Nicholson advised combining the offices of Secretary and Treasurer to simplify the book-keeping and mailing out of reports. He also recommended that only those members of the Society be chosen as directors who show that they are interested in the work of the organization by attending its meetings. It is important that the members be first interested in helping to make the society's undertakings successful before they are appointed as directors. In closing Mr. Nicholson expressed his appreciation of the co-operation of the Secretary, Mrs. A. C. Blakely and the treasurer Mrs. Howard Cunningham.

The Secretary's report noted the highlights of the Societies activities during the year, which included lectures on horticultural subjects by Mr. C. Clark, Mr. Hubbard, Rev. Nicholson, the Flower Show, the Name Box Competition and a Lawn Social.

Carleton — Reid

A quiet wedding took place at St. George's Rectory, Trenton on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock when Miss Evelyn Reid of Frankford became the bride of Mr. Harry Carleton, a popular young man of this community. Miss Estelle Reid was her sister's bridesmaid while Mr. Arthur Morn supported the groom. Rev. F. Arthur Smith performed the ceremony. A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents at Frankford on Saturday evening to which the immediate friends were present. Mrs. Carleton is well known in this community having been employed for some time at Mr. J. H. Blakely's store.

RIGHT ON TOP of the accessory list are those lovely evening headdresses. A crescent of gilded ostrich has a tiny upstanding spray at the side front; a narrow bandeau of tortoise shell is finished at either side with tiny bunches of pink roses and green leaves.

A NEAT CIRCLE is made by those ornamental belts designed to dress up the plain evening frock. A sliger cord mesh belt, very wide, with a design of multi-lined stones set in silver studdings would do wonders for a plain black crepe or velvet gown.

It will also be developed into a holiday resort for members of the Pentecostal Fellowship both in Canada and the United States.

6,765 STONES FOUND IN GALL BLADDER

Danville, Jan. 17 (AP)—She was looking quite well, Mrs. Ida Bullock of Lake, of West Lebanon, Ind., told Dr. Ralph Eastman after an operation and found she was right.
There were 6,765 stones in her gall bladder.
Nurses spent several hours extracting an instrument count after Dr. Henry Hooker, surgeon, said he had never seen one of such a case in 30 years of surgery.
The stones ranged in size from a grain of wheat to a pea, Dr. Hooker reported.
Although the number of stones was unusual, it was not a record. Archives of the American Medical Association showed. One surgeon, Dr. J. F. Baldwin, of Columbus, Ohio, reported removing 4,000 stones and said he had read medical accounts of as many as 17,000.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Jan. 17 (AP)—Trading turned extremely quiet today in the stock market, as prices seesawed indecisively. U. S. Smelting declined more than 3 points and Cerro De Pasco and American Smelting about a point. Modest displays were made by Pure Oil, Texas Corp., Socony-Vacuum, U. S. Steel, Westinghouse, New York Central, American Telephone, United Corp., Public Service of N.J., and Commonwealth Edison. Against the usual "selling on the news" of its Preferred dividend arrearage plan, declining about a point.
The late tone was irregular. Transfers approximated 2,300,000 shares.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Jan. 17 (CP)—An early upsurge in the base metal issues on Toronto Mining Market was not maintained today and afternoon prices showed narrow losses in the group. Lower prices for copper and lead along with a sharp drop in the silver quotation in both London and New York paced a general affection in the list. The gold share market was slow and a bit soft also.
Trees a morning top of 48½, Noranda backed up to 47¾, down to 46¾, Hollinger, Sudbury Basin and Falconbridge also dropped their morning gains. In the silvers Kirkland Lake weakened to 3 cents and Nipissing lost a morning rise of a few cents. In the golds losses were limited to a few cents each for the secondary issues.

TORONTO INDUSTRIALS

Toronto, Jan. 17.—(CP)—Distillery and metal-shares maintained a firm to strong tone on the Toronto industrial market today while the oils foods and heavy industrials were inclined to ease down under light trading action. Walkers Common and Distillers Corp. Seagrams each point each and Dominion Stores featured the foods by advancing nearly a point.

Profit-taking appeared in the oils and prices gave ground by fractions among the leaders, Superior ordinary held strong adding a point. The market was again a bit heavy for Canadian vingas.
Industrials mixed with International Nickel which advanced nearly a point and was holding a gain of about a half point this afternoon.

Butter Prices Ease On U. K. Markets

Ottawa, Jan. 17 (CP)—Cable advice to the Department of Agriculture today said butter was firm and cheese unchanged on United Kingdom markets yesterday.
Quotations: Butter—New Zealand and Australian 90 to 91 shillings per cwt. (18.83 to 20.15 cents per lb.).

ADEE STAVISKY ACQUITTED

CASTLE TRETHEWEY

It is understood that application will be made within the next few weeks to list the shares of Oregon Gold Mines on the Toronto Stock Exchange. Castle owns 2,500,000 shares of Oregon which is received for advances and mining has come in shape for production which is understood to start in the near future. The total capital of Oregon is 5,000,000 shares and stock to the amount of 2,500,000 shares is being offered for sale. The price is 10 cents, up from about 80 cents in 4 months. The rise in Oregon has naturally found reflection in Castle Trethewey which has been a feature of the market in recent sessions. Oregon is going to be a producer of the large interest in Oregon, is reported to be equal to approximately 80 cents per share of stock, the portfolio comprising widely shares of International Nickel and McIntyre Porcupine.

J. M. CONSOLIDATED

Although called at 100 tons a day capacity will be capable of treating at least 300 tons a day when 100 tons a day it is learned. The management anticipates that about 45 to 50 tons daily will be operated at $7.00 a ton. The results of the diamond drilling with Kirkland Hudson Bay Mines, a subsidiary of Lake Shore, assures the Company sufficient ore reserves to pay for the mill in full and to carry on an extensive development program well beyond the production stage. It is thus anticipated that J. M. will start production with no debts and cash in the bank.

RED LAKE GOLD SHORE

New developments on the 300-foot level at Red Lake Gold Shore mines have been exposed the presence of what had been primarily thought to be the South, according to an official statement. Widths of 18 ft. have been opened up in this section, with the value being maintained at average grade for this level. Sections of a new vein running at right angles to the main vein have also been disclosed but work has not been sufficient as yet to prove that this is a new vein rather than a wide section of the main vein.

One of the most heartening features about the present bull market advance is taking place in an orderly manner. The Street is in an orderly manner. The Street is in an optimistic frame of mind and one sees something unforeseen happens, higher prices are in the offing. The business picture is encouraging, with many industries that have lagged behind showing signs of getting into the "black." If the general consensus can be taken as a criterion, 1936 will witness a continuation of improvement in both business and securities.

Additions to portfolios at this juncture should be on the basis of their individual merit rather than merely for conservation in the market. Because of the relatively advanced levels of most favorably situated issues, purchases should be on a highly selective basis. Nevertheless, the reassurance of a constructive policy appears fully justified.

Mining stocks are continuing in favor and higher prices are anticipated for a number of the Junior gold producers. Trading developments for the "golds" are considered healthy. While Lake Shore again heard the Canadian mining securities offer an excellent haven for odd funds.

INDICATIONS ARE FOR HIGHER DIVIDENDS

Lake Shore net profits for 1935 probably exceeded $10,000,000 according to preliminary estimates. The company paid $4,000,000 or $4 per share in 1934 after setting the reserve and is believed to have added over $1,000,000 to surplus. There may yield to higher dividends. This was accomplished by Lake Shore in spite of the heavy cost of a programme of salvaging all the lower grade ore remaining in old workings.

CANADIAN INDUSTRIAL ALCOHOL

The annual financial statement of the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Company, Limited, for the year ended September 30th, 1935, will be issued by the end of January to shareholders with a great deal of interest. Earnings amounted to 1-3c a share on the total number of shares outstanding after taking into account the effect of the recent conversion of accounts from sterling to Canadian funds at 4.86 2/3.
Headway was made during the period under review and the results were not completed until after the close of the company's fiscal year, therefore they are not reflected in the balance sheet. Further particulars in this connection will undoubtedly be forthcoming at the annual meeting of shareholders in January 30th.
The principal problem confronting the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Company is one of getting their whiskey on hand before American corporation have sufficient time to make an inventory of some proportions. The present management has moved several outlets with this end in view and time alone will tell if they will be able to liquidate the entire amount of whiskey on had at attractive prices or not.

GRAIN

Winnipeg, Jan. 17 (CP)—Responsive to firmness at Liverpool, wheat prices were quietly steady at fractionally higher levels in early Winnipeg Grain Exchange dealings today. Near mid-session, values were 1/8 cent higher to unchanged. May 81¼ and July 82¾ and October 87¾ cents.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

All highways and by-ways lead to the Belleville Arena tonight for the gala opening of the O.H.A. season in the Quinte District. The highly touted Peterboro squad, crammed with sports of all, will supply the opposition for Eddie Thomas' scarlet-clad pucksters. Three members of the Lifflock city netball team are over about for Manager Eddie Wright in the persons of Tommy Foley, their goalkeeper, Willie Calladine and Red Dellin. Naturally the fans will be more than interested in the appearance of Roy Covert, ex-Belleville star, and Ted Geddes, the imported Toronto kid, who is rated so high by the Peterboro crowd. Manager Thomas was still angling for "Buster" Whitton at a late hour this morning and hoped to have him in uniform for tonight's tussle with the Pats. The ice at the Arena is lightning fast, states Manager Coy and all is in readiness for the jarring off of the O.H.A. tilt for the season. Incidentally the splendid showing made by the locals at Peterboro one week ago last elevated the hopes of local fans to hopes for victory over the pucksters of the Rubber town.

Invitations to send delegates to the annual meeting of the local KI-Y League have been publicly made by Secretary Jim Sharpe. The local league eligible for competition in the KI-Y leagues are asked to file applications at the Y.M.C.A. desk before 2.00 p.m. Monday, as the entries close then and the group schedules will subsequently be announced. Although the junior series is being discontinued this year, the juvenile, bantam and midget groups will be operated as in the past. The Club and Y.M.C.A. for the furtherment of the league in Belleville. Theyare organizing hockey teams; had better bustle and get their teams entered in the K.I.-Y. league as the winter is fast drawing to a close.

For the fans interested in amateur boxing and wrestling a special card of these activities is being staged at the Victoria Hall on Monday night with local talent supplying the material. Steve Taylor's amateur wrestlers will stage three grappling bouts while three squabs of good boxing entertainment is arranged by Howard "Dynamite" Shelley. Belleville boxers and wrestlers are being engaged throughout.

Something new in the annals of the local sporting realm is being tried at the Albert College gym Saturday. Athletic Instructor Pete Reach has invited teams from the Kingston Y.M.C.A. Belleville "Y" and his own proteges to compete in a novel day's sporting programme. Each organization is asked to bring two teams of eight men each to the Albert College, where the meet is being held. One team is to consist of boys 15 years and under, while the other class is to be 18 years and under. Starting at 2.30 p.m. a round robin series of basketball in each group will be played. Later on there will be a gymnastic exhibition by ping pong and also checkers, while at night, a mammoth swimming meet will be held with every event known to the aquatic sport being included in the programme. The meet is to be held at Albert College and is open to the public.

"Dusky" Smith's Belleville Yacht Club pucksters open the Bay Quinte League in Picton tonight. Coach Jimmie Keegan has Hinton in the nets, Jim Ribbet and Moore on defence with Fred McGuire, Cliff Davis, Wallace Hubbell, Bill Pryer, Joe Sennett, Jack Dennis, Carson and McCreary as attacking forwards. Representing the Church and Roly, Herbs of Picton football fame are sponsoring the Prince Edward County entry this season.

The local Industrial Hockey League opened with a bang last evening at the Arena, with no one-sided scores being registered. The evenness of the scores indicates the close competition the loop are equally balanced thus assuring the future success of the loop. The St. Andrew's Men's Club eked out a 2 to 1 victory over the American Hardware 'Orbine' team, while the Bankers hung it on Corry's to the tune of 4 to 2. The third game was a thriller and saw the Belleville-Sargent combo down ahead of the Rod and Gun Club sextette to the tune of 3 to 2. Incidentally Manager George Coy is in possession of more cards for such games as these. The Industrial Hockey league that should appear in the press. All that is expected from the team heads is to procure one of these score cards and fill it out, returning the card to Manager Coy after the game. The report of the game will appear in the following day's paper if the card is operated with the management of the Arena. After the Industrial games the Arena has trounced the "Top Hats" by the score of 7 to 4 in the initial game played in the Owl League.

Ralph Morden's Belleville eye openers ran into a snag at the hands of the Kingston "Y" quintette last evening and came home on the short end of a 33 to 24 score. The locals held their own in the initial half and were resulting long shots but lost-rayes to rate by McLaughlin. The Kingston's span sensational, specific defeat for the locals. Ordinarily Coach Morden is a quiet unassuming young man, but today he contends, that Referee Drew of Kingston will never officiate at an other basket ball game played by a Belleville team. "Understand me, the officials did not purposely make mistakes, I don't think, but his knowledge of the rules was what one might call 'nil.' We searched all over the Kingston "Y" for a 1935 rule book, but apparently they don't possess one. Referee Drew apparently followed under the impression, that there have not been any changes in the rules for the past few years, and it was due to his meagre knowledge of the game that we got beat, but I can safely say that we'll be in the thick of the fight and on top when the final game is concluded." concluded Coach Morden rather disgustedly.

KI-Y LEAGUE TO HAVE 3 SERIES

Organization Meeting to be Held at "Y" on Monday

Local KI-Y League officials today announced that the annual meeting for the reception of entries into that organization would be held at the Y.M.C.A. on Monday, January 20th, at 8.00 p.m. Only three series are being sponsored by the KI-Y officials this year, the junior series of '20 years and under being dispensed with, owing to other leagues absorbing the players that would come under this category.

It has been suggested by Secretary J. E. Short, that two delegates be present at the "Y" on Monday night from each team desirous of competition in the KI-Y League in 1936. The series to be operated this year are —Juvenile, 17 years and under; Bantam 14 years and under and Midget of 11 years and under. Monday night's meeting will be final and only teams having submitted entries up to Monday night will be considered in the schedules, that will be drawn immediately following this gathering.

The KI-Y officials have completed arrangements to have all games in the juvenile and bantam groups played at the Belleville Arena while negotiations have been opened with the Belleville Yachting Club to permit the playing of the midget games on their hardwood rink after school hours, thereby eliminating any possible expense entailed in the renting of the covered and lighted Arena for these young-er and smaller boys.

In the years past the local KI-Y Hockey League has enjoyed a marked success in Belleville and has been responsible for the development of many young hockey players. The league is made possible and hockey supervised through the efforts of the local Kiwanis Club in conjunction with the Y.M.C.A. goal keepers' equipment, pucks, referees and supervision is supplied by the Kiwanis and the "Y". Teams interested in such competition are urged to have their entries in as early as possible. Application can be made at the desk in the Y.M.C.A. prior to Monday night if desired.

BELLEVILLE "Y" DROP CAGE GAME TO KINGSTON "Y"

REFEREE CRITICISED

Failure to check Kingston forwards in mid-floor during the dying moments of the game cost the Belleville "Y" squad of hoopsters their regular scheduled K.O.A.A.A. game, played at Kingston "Y" last evening, when headed by McLaughlin, their centre player, the Limestone City quintette defeated the Belleville "Y" by the score of 33 to 24.

Coach Ralph Morden's Belleville squad were leading by the score of 11 to 10 at the halfway mark and seemed the aggressors, but a sudden lapse in checking and the meagre knowledge of the rules displayed by Referee Drew of Kingston, paved the way for a Belleville defeat.

McLaughlin led the scorers of the night with eight points, as McMahon bagged eight and Elliott three. Al Watterson led the locals on the attack with eight points, Cole and White scored five points each for Belleville as Ab. Faulkner notched four. The locals are scheduled to meet the Belleville "Y" squad in a league game at the B.C.I. gym next Thursday night. Belleville completed with a total of seventeen foul shots, while Kingston "Y" successfully threw six of twelve foul shots tried.

"REDMEN" TO TACKLE PETES

For the first time in five years a Belleville hockey team will skate out upon the ice bedecked in the old conventional colors of red and white, those flaming sweaters that are honor and distinction brought to Belleville hockey circles many times in years past, when the "Redmen" clash with the all-star Peterboro intermediates in a regular scheduled O.H.A. fixture tonight at the Belleville Arena.

Manager Thomas equipped his squad with brilliant scarlets sweaters bearing the large capital "B" in white on the front and white numerals on the back. Peterboro still cling to their blue and white colors of ancient days. The local aggregation of intermediate pucksters have been working out with regularity this week and are in fine fettle to meet the highly heralded pucksters from the Lifflock City, imports and all. One week ago the Petes staged a midnight rally to worn out by a 10 to 8 victory over the locals in a game that saw the Belleville entry out-play and out-smart Coach Eddie Wright's Petes in the first and last periods.

Manager Eddie Thomas of the "Redmen" spent a good deal of time on the long distance telephone this afternoon endeavoring to procure permission for the O.H.A. star "Buster" Whitton of Campbellford in tonight's game and prevailing an answer in the affirmative is received, Whitton will be tied up with Belleville for Belleville's first starting line. The remainder of the local squad will be the same as faced the Peterboro team one week ago in the Lifflock City.

The line-ups of both teams, including the numbers displayed on their sweaters, are as follows:

Belleville—Goal, Gordon or Jeffery 1; defence, H. Ingram 2 and Earl McDonald 3; centre, St. Louis 7; wings, Carl Morgan 8; Pete Morgan 4; rube, Buster Whitton 8; Jimmie McGuire 9; Cy Harrison 11; Harry Morgan 10; and Stewie McElrain, who will wear No. 5 in case Whitton does not play.

Peterboro—Goal, Foley; defence, Jopling and Weir; centre, Calladine; wings, Covert and Geddes; subs, Dallin, Cadd, Ellis and Vilarelli.

Brockville Magedomas Win in Ragged Game

Brockville, Ont., Jan. 17 (CP)—Brockville's unbeaten Magedomas hung up their ninth straight victory here last night when they defeated Cornwall Colts 6 to 4 in a ragged Ottawa Senior City League game.

LaSalle, outplayed at practically every turn, grew over-strenuous and piled up ten penalties of which Eddie Coulter drew four and P. Bordeleau and Bennett three apiece by with but two banishments, both in the first period, and managed to stave off defeat until the last by Ottawans in the meantime.

Coulter, the League's leading scorer, improved his position by getting a goal and an assist.

The win put Brockville seven points ahead of Emeralds, who were beaten 6-1 by Queen's in Kingston tonight in the standing. Royal Canadian Air Force hold their third place with nine points; LaSalle with eight while Queen's occupy cellar position with two points, four behind Rideau.

ARENA "MICE" TAKE TOP HATS

First Game in Owl League Played at The Arena

Displaying surprising speed and general hockey ability the local Owl League, that operates close to the Belleville Arena, made its debut in the arena swung into action late last night with the Arena "Mice" winning the initial game of the league inclusive by the score of 7 to 4 over the Top Hats.

The Arena sextette, headed by Pete Coyer and Bill Revella, showed more speed and scoring ability but were faced with tough opposition in the hands of the Top Hats. Led by the count of 3 to 1 at the end of the initial frame, the Arena "Mice" kept adding to their advantage and finished three goals ahead of their rivals. Bill Storms with three goals led the marksmen, while Pete Coyer bagged two with Revella and Collins each registering one tally. Referee Bowbotham, Crawford and Tapp were the Top Hat players to flash the red light behind Carson, in the Arena nets. Both goalies turned in stellar performances in a fast-playing interesting game.

The line-ups—Arena Mice—Goal, Carson; defence, Collins and George centre, Coyer; wings, Storms and Bayliss; subs, Knott, M. Storms, Reynolds, Bruce and McKenna.

Top Hats—Goal, Stewart; defence Harris and Sager, centre, Morgan; wings, Ling and Plummer; subs—Lye, Baby, Crawford, H. Sager, Faulkner, Tapp, Phillips, Manzfield and V. Rowbotham.

ART COULTER
EARL SEIBERT

RANGERS TRADE SEIBERT FOR COULTER OR CHIHAWKS—Biggest straight player deal of the 1935-36 hockey season, has Earl Seibert, hard-bumping defenceman with New York Rangers, travelling to Chicago Black Hawks in exchange for Coulter, clever Chihawk rear-guard, with cash involved. The two players, both in the very top rung of major league defencemen, are shown above. Seibert failed to report for six weeks after the Belleville squad opened, refusing to accept the contract proffered and his action is reported to have angered the New York moguls. He was chosen last year on the All-star team. Coulter has proved himself one of the most capable men behind the blue line this year.

Dale Plays The Game

Ann Forester

CHAPTER 1.

TWO—IN THE DARK

The Princess Theatre was playing Cobl City. To be sure it was only a second rate road company which was bringing the year's most successful comedy, but Cobl City had learned not to be choosey. The little California oil-town was off the beaten track of plays. As a usual thing, the box office boarded on Main Street provided nocturnal entertainment for the boys' Friday and the drillers, who drove in at dusk from surrounding oil fields, so the mere fact that the old wooden opera house was lighted at all was something in the history of an event.

Fuming and happy, Cobl City flocked down to the barn-like building, bent upon enjoying itself in spite of the killing heat. After all, what difference did it make, whether one baked out doors or in? The day had marked one of the heat peaks of the year and darkness had brought little relief to town. Stretched natatly under the stars, the raw little town seemed to pant and quiver beneath their hard white stare as it had panted and quivered under the fierce desert sun. The buildings gave up the stored heat of the day. The garishly lighted entrance to the theatre looked like the yawning mouth of some infernal oven.

But the alley behind the theatre, which led to the stage door, was thick with shadows. Here was darkness so thick that anyone walking along Main Street, and glancing casually into the narrow space would think it deserted. No one could see the slender figure of a girl, who clung to a stair, trying bitterly. Her voice was low and intense with a breathless little catch in it—the voice of a child who has cried too long.

"—and tonight is the end, Phil. I can't stand it any longer. No matter what I say—how hard I try—Lila Delorme manages to get me into trouble. She's working to get me out of the company. I didn't like her! she added bitterly. "I want to, Davis. It's only her part of course. He has to side with her. I'm nobody——and she's Delorme. If she is getting old and faded." She couldn't deny herself the bitter satisfaction of that bit.

The man moved a little uneasily. "Now, Dale, sweetheart, don't get all worked up over our nasty luck if you've got to look at things sensibly."

She twisted away a little to look up at him. Her face was a vague white patch in the dark, her eyes two shadowy pools.

"Trying to smooth things over again, aren't you, Phil?" she asked wearily. "Afraid Delorme will get down on you if you take my part. Oh, my dear, if you only knew all the petty little fights she's got out me since the show started. I had to have work and——it is useless being with you, so shut my teeth hard and said nothing. But Lil could tell——"

"Now, Dale, dear! Do we have to go all over that again?"

He could feel her steady regard in the dark. Her voice was a little sad. "Ready to side against me as usual, Phil, even when you know I'm right! Just because you happen to be the latest fancy of a selfish, silly woman old enough to be your mother!"

"Dale, hush!"

"I don't care! If she does hear us!" the girl cried passionately. "I wish she would! It would be the best thing. It would put an end to this whole ridiculous situation!"

Phil tried to soothe her and there was a touch of pride in his manner. "Now, sweetheart don't you see, we have to use our heads! Remember what Delorme's influence means in the theatrical world. Oh, I know——" his voice was cautiously low now. "she's finished on the board or she'd never be heading this road show. By using her name I can get interviews with managers when I couldn't crash their outer offices by myself. And you know, Dale, if it wasn't for Delorme, we'd still be plugging songs and dances down in the night club.

"I wish we were!" the girl answered hotly. "It wasn't because she thought you had talent that Delorme took such a sudden interest in you and gave a part in her show! It was because you flattered the old fool and she fell for it. Fell for your good looks—because you made love to her! I——I wish she'd never laid eyes on you!" Her voice broke. "We were getting along beautifully under cover—back into the Parisian Cafe. If—if she hadn't come between us—we'd be married by now——"

She had begun to cry and he tried to draw her closer. But she held him away, one slender arm braced against his chest.

"It's the truth, Phil! She broke up our little act. Oh, I know she got me into the company also—as a chorus girl, because you insisted. But that's jealous of me and going ahead so well, Phil," she added bitterly. "I'm proud of you! You're better on the stage than I am and I want to see you make good. But I can't stand by silently and see her making trouble between us!" trying to break our engagement——"

Dale shrugged with her tears for a moment then went on quickly: "We were so happy before she came Phil. Planning to marry and go ahead together. I didn't mind being poor and working hard. I've done that all my life. And I was willing to go on, putting up with shabby hotels and cheap restaurants and making coffee on an alcohol stove in the tray of my trunk. Just so we were together. But—putting the way we used to—— planning the time when our names would be in electric lights. You and I, Phil! Even if our wonderful dreams didn't ever come true I would have been content—just to be together. You say you're the same, but I know differently! Ever since we've joined this show I've been afraid. Lila Delorme's changed you, somehow, Phil. Yes——" in answer to his impatient shrug. "You have changed! You are not so sweet—so unspoiled. There's something hard about you now."

He moved impatiently under her pleading hands.

"Oh, Dale, that's all bunk! Cut out the sob stuff! What do you expect me to do? Snub Delorme?"

Her voice was very grave. "Do what I'm going to do, Phil. Quit the show. I've already told Davis I was going to quit tonight. Come with me Phil. Let's take on our own little act. Some day we'll get Orpheum bookings——"

His laugh was a sneer. "Splendid! Go back to being a hoofer in a night club! No, thanks!

Nothing short of a miracle could preserve him from. Cobl had exhausted his strength in the futile search death. He was so weak that he could only stagger for her and her adjacent, forgetful of himself until a few slone and then sink to the ground where he hunger and fatigue had taken toll of his strength. would be forced to lie for a long time. Always there At last he knew that he had reached the end of his the knowledge that eventually he would not endurance. rise.

He was trying to shake off the grip of her small hot hands.

"We'll make good on our own, Phil! Truly we will! And..... we could be married.....

The silence which followed was so heavy it could be felt. The ring of footsteps on Main Street was unnaturally loud. From down by the railway came the chugging of engines—the short yelp of whistles as freight cars were switched about. The man shifted from one foot to the other. Then he laughed and the short sound jabbed.

"Oh, all right! All right! If you insist on being such a dramatic little fool I suppose there's nothing to do but let you have it! Well, make up your mind that if you quit, you quit alone! This part is the first real chance I've had to get ahead and I'm sticking! If the fool woman gets it into her head that I'm in love with her—well, what do I care if it helps me get ahead. And you aren't going to spoil my chances with her, get that into your head! If you can't get on with Delorme, well that's your hard luck. After this you fight your own battles. A fellow has to use his head if he expects to get somewhere in this world and I'm looking out for the chances for Phil Clifford. You look out for Dale Evans!"

His words were cut short as the stage door behind them suddenly opened. A stout woman, heavily rouged and clad in an absurdly short costume of baby-blue satin, peered down at them.

"Sorry to butt into a real clubby lover's row, my darlings, but your scene is coming up, Phil."

"All right, Lil!" he flung back impatiently over his shoulder.

She nuffed a hideous face. "Don't mention it, Phillo my King! Take all the time you like, so far as I'm concerned, but bear in mind that Delorme's taking her encore on the Primrose song and she'll desire to see her little playmate out front! I might add that she has a temper

Yet he would not give up. He could not die, he must not die while Zora Drinov was in danger. He had found a well beaten trail at last, but he could not crawl for he had not the strength to rise; then suddenly the moment came that marked the end.

As he lay to the trail, resting before he dragged himself on again, he was suddenly conscious that he was not alone. With an effort, he raised his head and looked. Before him in the trail stood, a great lion, his lips snarling, his yellow-green eyes glaring fiercely.

owned eyes eyes could thrill women with tonight like cayenne pepper, so make it snappy, old dear!"

Like an obliging jack-in-the-box she dodged back and darkness descended with the slamming of the door. To the wide gaze of the girl the man's face seemed to float on the blackness. She had seen it picked out by the yellow light the moment before.

A handsome face had young Phil Clifford. Too handsome, men sometimes thought. Something a little cruel in the curve of his wilful young mouth. Ladies, too long and thick for a man, turned his hazel eyes nearly black. Those deep shad-a sense of deep intimacy, just as his voice, low and warm—a voice like thick brown velvet someone once said—flattered them with the implication of personal interest.

Artificial tricks, both. Suggesting a depth of nature which Phil Clifford did not possess. But how could Dale Evans—young an inexperienced—know that? She only knew that when Phil kissed her he drew her adoring soul through her lips, she knew now, that his words were swords which he was thrusting into her heart. Killing her trust. Wounding her pride. Shaming and betraying her love....

WHEN THE UMPIRE FINISHED ON TOP . . .

Tim Hurst, umpire, was such a quaint character in the national pastime that many stories are told about him. Credit Billy Evans, who was 20 years an American league arbiter, for this one that Tim himself used to tell.

Tim was umpiring in Baltimore one day. There was a man on first base.

"The man started to steal," said Hurst, telling the story.

"As he left the bag he spiked the first-baseman and that player attempted to trip him. The second baseman blocked the runner and in sliding into the bag, the runner tried to spike Hugh Jennings, who was playing shortstop.

"Jennings, however sat on the runner and knocked the man's wind out.

"Meanwhile, the batter hit Wilbert Robinson, who was catching, on the hands with his bat so that he couldn't throw, and Robbie took off my face with his spikes and showed his glove hide my face so that I couldn't see to give a decision.

"I was called upon in a difficult situation to be it, and was one of the hardest decisions I had to make."

"What did you decide?" Tim was asked.

He punched Robbie in the ribs, called it a foul and sent the runner back to first," answered Hurst.

Gotham Fans Believe Amerks Trying Too Hard for Victories

(By George Maguire)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)
New York, Jan. 18.—(CP)— It seems Mister Jack Adams of Detroit, to the contrary, she troubles with New York Americans of the National Hockey League is that the Amerks are too aggressive.

It was not so long ago Adams included the Amerks with several other teams as outfits who when away from home were more prone to lay back and let the opposing club carry the play.

A poll of fans attending home games of the Dutton skaters however shows the majority of the Amerk supporters wish the Americans, when at home anyway would show the enthusiasm for goal scoring—or rather efforts to bring on the real fight.

A majority said they thought the reason why the well-knit machine Dutton has organized are not leading the league is because "they try too hard." Some said "they are too nervous when near the goal", while others believe merely the "players are trying too hard to win for Dutton".

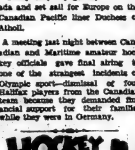
That Manager Dutton has got together an outfit that is keenly for him there is no doubt. A word of the dissension, that formerly circulated among the players, is not apparent.

In the majority of home games the New Yorkers have outplayed their opposition, yet games they should have won have been lost by narrow margins. Time and again even such deadly marksmen as Nels Stewart and Art Chapman have had the enemy goalkeeper at their mercy, when the biting or whimsical goal was at their stickhip yet they have inevitably missed.

OLYMPIC SQUAD READY TO SAIL

Defeat Halifax 5-3 And Win Six Out of 10 Games Played

Halifax, Jan. 17 (CP)—After defeating six of ten teams played on a tour of Canada east from Winnipeg, the Dominion's Olympic hockey squad made ready today for a conquest of Europe.



With three decisive victories over Montreal, Moncton and Halifax teams under their belts, they were confident they had at last found their stride under the coaching of Albert Pudas of Fort Arthur, and made up for their poor record against Western teams.

Last night they defeated a young Halifax aggregation, picked from an independent league 5-3 with a great exhibition of skating, puck-handling and scoring. They played against Moncton and Halifax two nights in a row without the services of Captain Herman Murray, Ralph St. Germain, Hugh Farquharson and Ken Farmer.

Grabbing up three goals last night in the first period the Maple-Leafed speed kept their lead intact against the Halifax All Stars in a noreleen second period and a two-goal-each third. Gus Rasberg scored two of their goals, and Thompson, Dave Neville and Jud Kitchen one apiece.

Today they say goodbye to Canada and set sail for Europe on the Canadian Pacific liner Duchess of Atholl.

A meeting last night between Canadian and Maritime amateur hockey officials gave final airing to one of the strangest incidents of Olympic sport—dismissal of four Halifax players from the Canadian team because they demanded financial support for their families while they were in Germany.

By RAY COLLETT

Tis a far cry from the league penalty-gathering championship to crystalize the team, where his duties include calming irate players whose tempers are inclined to flare, but big Eddie Shore has effected the transformation. The Bruin defence ace has toned down a lot from the bruising bustler of other years.

When hockey selectors are picking out the all-star aggregation of all time for hockey's Valhalla, they are going to find it tough getting Eddie down from the list. In the old days they were few more dangerous scoring threats in hockey than the wheat farmer from Fort Qu'Appelle either among forwards or defencemen. Shore, though has mellowed with age and the weight of many hockey years, he is still the Boston Bruins mainstay.

Frank Patrick, who now coaches the Boston Bruins, and Lester Shore has been with Boston since he entered the league in 1927 — once turned down the request to have Eddie applied for a berth. Patrick was on the Seattle Coast entering the hockey pic then, and Eddie Shore was an unknown. Patrick couldn't see him as coming star.

There is a story told of Eddie that when he was a railroad engineer before turning to professional hockey, he had as a fireman, Verne Sankey. Sankey barged himself in an American) jail cell after a hectic crime career which ended up with a kidnapping charge. But Eddie goes marching on, still one of the most colorful and outstanding of players in big-time hockey.

ON THE BACK—Boob tumors have it that Harvey Sucker Jackson, brilliant left-winger of Toronto Maple Leafs "Kid Line", is up for sale to any club willing to meet the price tag placed on him by Maple Leafs. Jackson (SHOWN ABOVE) is valued at a new high figure for hockey players, it is said, with Chicago Black Hawks definitely interested in him. He was a pre-season holdout, a widow and daughter.

SCOT 2, SCENE 1—MEETING OF DANNO AND THE MAT— Danno O'Mahony, heavyweight wrestling champ, is in the act of going down, down toward the mat from a heavy cuff on the chin administered by Chief Little Wolf, in a New York bout. The picture was snapped in that fraction of a second when Danno was seemingly suspended in thin air. For forty minutes Chief Little Wolf cuffed the champ from pillar to post. In the forty-first minute, however, the lad from Erin rose to the heights designated by the title he bears, and dumped the chief, winning the latter's shoulders to the mat. Danno won and retained his title.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

George Arliss

"Mister Hobo" Clever Sly Fake at Financial Charlatanry

Out of the rut, both in theme and in its characterization, is George Arliss' second picture for G.B. "Mister Hobo", current at the Capitol Theatre. Satirizing modern financial charlatanry, Arliss plays the role of an old ragabond who becomes involved in the schemes of an investment banker and, by a mixture of sheer unworldliness and naive cunning, frustrates there every effort.

Here is a new Arliss but, as ever, the same polished actor fitting into the background of a flop house or a dusty highway as superbly as his Rothschild took to the background of a bank wearing his robes of rags as convincingly as he wore the decorations of Disraeli or Wellington. His hobo is a real man and a lovable one.

The story is a clever —even a sly —one. An old ragabond, with the humorously inappropriate name of Rothschild, falls, with a fellow-poacher, into the hands of the police. The authorities get in touch with the banking Rothschilds, who investigate the tramp's history, find he is harmless, though unconnected with the family, and give him a cheque in charity.

Mister Hobo presents the cheque as the basis for accepted as an eccentric millionaire. The managing director, aware that the bank is in difficulties, sees an opportunity of exploiting the tramp's name and his simplicity, and persuades him to become president.

The banker on the strength of a secret report showing a new lode of metal in a supposedly worthless mine, is plotting to buy the property for a song from the unwitting hobo and daughter.

AT THE BELLE

"Mutiny on the Bounty"

World's Greatest Motion Picture Coming

If the motion picture camera had been in position some 150 years ago, no more authentic nor thrilling record of the amazing exploits of H.M.S. Bounty and the historical mutiny could have been recorded than will be seen in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's saga of the seas, "Mutiny on the Bounty", which opens at the Belle Theatre tomorrow (Saturday) for four days, matinee daily.

The story, a foaming mass of thrilling art, born of light and mechanical genius, will take the world on a voyage of adventure, such as has never been undertaken by any picture company. Filmed entirely on the high seas, with a cast of players headed by Clark Gable, Charles Laughton and Franchot Tone, and a production staff headed by Irving G. Thalberg, the picture is the most thrilling adventure of the Eighteenth Century now being screened. Director Frank Lloyd and an intrepid crew of actors and workmen sailed the storm-ridden South Seas over the same dangerous route sailed by H.M.S. Bounty, to get absolutely authentic backgrounds for this new Irving G. Thalberg attraction. The Pacific Coast shipbuilders using the original plans of the Bounty, reconstructed an absolute replica of the picturesque mutiny ship used in the picture. Months were spent in selecting the cast. Charles Laughton surpasses all his other masterful performances as the tyrannical disciplinarian, the cruel bad dominee Captain Blight. Clarke Gable portrays Fletcher Christian, the popular officer who leads the mutiny. Franchot Tone enacts the part of Midshipman Byam who supports Gable's insurrection.

In addition to the native girls, Marla and Mamo, featured roles in "Mutiny of the Bounty" are played by Herbert Mundi, Eddie Quillan, Dudley Digges, Donald Crisp, Henry Stephenson, Francis Lister and Spring Byington, with hundreds of supporting players appearing in the productions' many spectacular sequences.

No adventure story written during the Twentieth Century has created such a furore in the literary world as this amazing novel by James Norman Hall and Charles Nordhoff.

More than 20,000,000 people in America alone read the story when it ran serially in the world's greatest periodicals newspapers.

For many months it ranked as the best seller of all modern fiction and held it still remains among the very best. Now in its twelfth edition, it is estimated that at least another 3,000,000 have read the book.

Preparation for the screen play, the vast amount of research necessary and the selection of the unprecedented cast required more than a year.

Director Lloyd, producer of "Cavalcade" and noted for his spectacular production of outstanding sea stories, left no stone unturned to make "Mutiny on the Bounty" the screen's mightiest saga of the seas.

With his thrill-seeking crew he spent months on the Pacific seeking the worst storm of the year through which to capture his replica of an Eighteenth Century craft to bring to the World's theatres the perils of that ill-fated cruise of the Bounty.

A Breath-Taking Narrative

Man's imagination had never created a more thrilling or adventurous story, a greater tribute to courage, a more vivid drama of sacrifice and tragedy than this true story of the mightiest acts of human law.

And no playwright has ever penned more heart-rending drama than the incidents in trial of Midshipman Byam, unjustly accused of being a ringleader of the Bounty mutiny.

With the world as its stage, with the pounding sea as its background with the balancing of life and death in the balance, "Mutiny on the Bounty" is the most ambitious undertaking the motion picture has ever attempted.

To enjoy "Mutiny on the Bounty", you must see it from the beginning. It start daily at 3.00, 7.10 and 9.40 p.m.

Myrna Loy Leaving

As the first of the important new pictures to be made, Myrna Loy to the screen after her European success in "Becky Sharp", which she shares starring honors with Spencer Tracy and Margot Stephens, will be presented at the Belle tonight for the last times.

Of her role, place among the more important new season screen offerings,

"The delightful whimsy which Miss Loy first evidenced in "The Thin Man" is apparent again in large measure in this new picture. The Irving Thalberg touch is there and a spontaneity that is delightful to witness. The whole scenes precede the exhibition of the feature attraction."

JUST ANY BAG won't do if you are wearing an ankle-length or street-length cocktail dress. The accompany such frocks there are elaborate suede bags. A good model is of black antelope with a self-bracelet handle. The leather is softly shirred to a central motif held by an elaborate straw and crystal ornament.

Furls and Hardships

Adventure in the open again lured the perils of angry seas . . . . . the silent suffering of tyranny . . . . . the heartbreak of loneliness to recreate this immortal struggle of a handful of mutineers.

With what skill and courage Director Frank Lloyd and an intrepid crew of actors and workmen sailed the storm-ridden South Seas over the same dangerous route sailed by H.M.S. Bounty, to get absolutely authentic backgrounds for this new Irving G. Thalberg attraction. ANXIETY FELT OVER KING GEORGE'S INDISPOSITION

Kipling, Poet of British Empire, Dies In London After Operation

Rudyard Kipling, Known For Great Imperialism, Makes Brave Struggle

Wakes From Coma Just Before End to Recognize Wife, Daughter

POET OF EMPIRE

Whole Empire Mourns For Author, Who Wrote Tales And Poems

London, Jan. 18 (CP)—Rudyard Kipling, Great Britain's famous poet died early today in the Middlesex Hospital at the age of 70, ending the fight he gave after suffering a stroke into widespread mourning.

His body lay after today in the same simple room in a private room of the hospital which he had occupied since he underwent emergency surgery Monday for a perforated stomach ulcer. It did not become known immediately whether Kipling would be buried in Westminster Abbey, the resting place of so many of Britain's famous sons.

For four days since he was operated on Monday morning, only Kipling's flashing eyes gave evidence of his will to live—a will symbolic of the rugged strength he displayed throughout his career.

Light in Eyes Fails

Then, just before dawn Friday, the light in his eyes failed and he sank into unconsciousness.

His wife and his daughter were present when the end came, as was his surgeon, Dr. A. E. Webb-Johnson.

Utterly exhausted for more than 48 hours, he succumbed at 12.10 a.m. (7.10 p.m. Friday, E.S.T.) the complications arising from the operation.

Mrs. Kipling and her married daughter, worn by grief and their long vigil, retired soon afterward, almost in a state of collapse.

The end came peacefully. Only in the last hours did Kipling seem to recognize his family.

Started on Holiday

He had observed his 70th birthday anniversary quietly at Burwash; then, too, apparently in strong health.

POET OF EMPIRE—Rudyard Kipling, famous the world over as a writer of stories and poetry, and particularly as the poet of empire, succumbed early today at London to an illness which he immortalized in song. As a youth he wrote stories which will always live. He opened up a new field of interest.

PETERBORO WETS GET 47 MAJORITY

Continuance of Beer And Wine Sale Favored in Close Vote

Peterboro, Jan. 18 (CP)—In a close vote, citizens here have voted in favor of retaining sales of beer and wine in beverage rooms and dining rooms. Wets won by 3,145 votes and drys cast 3,098.

The vote, which was instituted on the plebiscite, the first to be held in a city in Ontario, required only three thirds. They fell short, however, to outvote those in favor of beer by 29 ballots.

Statements were issued by leaders of the rival organizations after the result of the plebiscite was announced.

"After an extremely bitterly contested election, the results indicate the good sense of the electors of Peterboro," Frank Pritchard, secretary of the Moderation League here, declared.

"Although the contest was close, the margin of votes in favor of continuation of the beverage rooms is sufficient to show definitely the wishes of Peterboro citizens in the matter," he added.

A. E. Cunningham, president of the Temperance Federation, also said: "We are certainly not going to rest here. It is extremely unfair that the financial interests should have a 99 per cent bandicap. By financial interests, Mr. Cunningham said he meant the liquor and brewery interests. "We find the three-fifths requirement discouraging a lot of people from voting," he added.

The north and west wards of the city gave the Drys a large majority.

Ottawa, Jan. 18 (CP) — Joseph Marcotte today walked from Carleton County jail after serving one month for theft and was arrested by Quebec police on a coroner's warrant charging him with the murder, Nov. 1932, of Alex Mondou, 54-year-old lumberjack.

Marcotte was arrested by Sergeant James Haney of the Quebec detective force. He will be taken to Rouyn-deaux jail in Montreal later today.

Mondou was beaten to death during a drinking bout in a hobo jungle on the outskirts of Rull, Que.

MANY CLAMOR TO OBTAIN TICKETS

No Speaker's Reception Will be Held at Opening Session

Toronto, Jan. 18 (CP)—The clamor to become part of the brilliance attending the formal opening of the Ontario Legislature next Tuesday is greater than ever although the government will follow the policy it has set of dispensing with the traditional speaker's reception following the throne speech.

Hon. Norman Rilpel, speaker, declared today applications for admission were at least double those of last year when interest in the opening was increased by the presence of the first Liberal government in a decade. For weeks his office adjoining the Chamber has been a scene of bustle as a busy staff attended to applications and invitations.

No Speaker's Reception

While the speaker's reception which Mrs. Hepburn once described as one of the "frills" will not take place, other ceremonies connected with the opening will occur as usual.

The Legislature will get down to business Wednesday, when the new session officially looms The Legislature is introduced. After this members will adjourn to the government and Municipal Acts made necessary by the Province's taking over from municipalities the right to levy the income tax have been completed the House will be adjourned for about a month.

It is the hope of the government to clean up this business by the end of the week and then ask the adjournment. Premier Hepburn is not expected to be present for the opening as he is on a southern holiday in search of health. Provincial Secretary Harry Nixon will lead the government.

The Opposition has preserved silence regarding its attitude towards the income tax and has allowed Hon. George S. Henry, Opposition Leader, and his followers will hold a caucus Wednesday to discuss the measure.

Tuberculosis Survey to be Made On Pupils of the Collegiate

Tests Will be Done by Experts From Department of Health

WILL COST $300

"A splendid thing. It has my complete endorsation. Every parent would be glad to take advantage of this and have their children undergo the tests. It is a forward movement," commented Dr. G. S. Cronk, M.O.H. for this city in referring to the action of the Board of Education at the first meeting of the New Year evening in authorizing a complete tuberculosis survey of pupils in the local Collegiate Institute.

"I'll be glad to assist in any manner," added the local Medical Officer of Health.

Under the scheme, experts of the Ontario Department of Health will visit Belleville and make complete tests of each child in the Collegiate. Previous to this, however, letters will be sent parents asking authorization of the tests, which will not be carried out on individual children unless the permission is given by the parent. The cost to the Board will be not more than $300.

All signs of tuberculosis are discovered among pupils, they will be referred to their family doctor.

Skidding on the icy pavement, an automobile driven by Ian M. Crulkshank, Chamilton Road, crashed into a hydro pole on Pine St., yesterday afternoon. Mr. Cruikshank was driving eastward on Pine St. and in attempting to pass a parked broad wagon, his motor car skidded on the icy pavement and became out of control, colliding with the pole. The car was damaged, but the driver was not left front fender, steering apparatus and the pole was not damaged, however.

Lionel Westfall, Dunbar St., reported that his car had been scarred windbreaker from the Arena last night. Westfall left his car parked in the dressing room as he was playing a game of hockey in the local Ice Devils League, and on his return the coat was missing. The matter was reported to P. C. Trudel for investigation.

Activities were at a rather low ebb in and around local police circles during the past 24 hours, however, no serious crime having been reported. Only four truancists brave the cold breezes last night and appeared at the police station in quest of a night's lodging.

Belleville Mart

Flying snowflakes and freezing winds, which whipped the district during the early part of the week cut down Saturday's market, to a scaling-up attendance. But the pick of both buyers and sellers for the outside market at ten o'clock a more had choices among the offerings on hand, offering their assorted wares, which consisted mostly of vegetables. Little change in prices was noted above those asked for the past several weeks for staple produce.

On the inside market a slim attendance was noted, but later in the day had advanced slightly, with the majority of the few vendors asking a straight 35c per pound. A few cases two-pound rolls were being sought at the early part of the day. Eggs were the same, 25 cents for pullets' and 30 cents for extras. A few fowl, mostly chickens were being sold at from 45 to 75 cents each. A few ducks were being held at $1 and $1.25.

Butchers today reported little change in prices, although in the main the livestock market was firm, with expectations of a slight advance in beef, and pork later, it was stated by one dealer. In the grain market sluggish trade during has resulted in little change in prices, although oats and grain is expected due for a rise shortly.

FATHER-SON BANQUET HELD AT THOMASBURG

J. O. Hartly Gave Address on "Thomasburg Soldiers"—Number of Order of Oddfellows

Belleville united with Thomasburg last evening in the observance of Father and Son night at a social evening and dinner arranged by the Thomasburg Lodge of the Independent Order of Oddfellows held in Oddfellows' Hall at Thomasburg.

Mr. John Dudgeon, Noble Grand of the Order presided over the meeting as chairman, introducing the various speakers and promoting the informality of the evening.

As a guest speaker of the evening, Mr. J. C. Hartly of Belleville, delivered a witty and informative address on "Thomas Wildey" who was the founder of the Independent Order of Oddfellows as it is known on the American continent. The address was particularly appropriate, inasmuch as Wednesday of this week marked the 154th anniversary of the birth of the founder of the Oddfellows.

Included among those who gave brief addresses were the Rev. W. Hill, of Roslin who spoke on "The Mission of Oddfellowship," a vocal solo was rendered by the Rev. F. O. Beaver, also of Roslin, while an instrumental trio, led by Mr. Albert Arbuckle assisted in the entertainment. The evening which followed was devoted to social amusements, games and varied entertainment. Accompanying Mr. Hartly to Thomasburg were Mr. H. D. Ranson and Mr. Wilbur Sherry of this city.

HEALTH SURVEY OF STUDENTS

ing, Trustee Cushing will represent the Separate School Board and succeeds Hiram B. Lally, who held the office last year.

In accepting the chairmanship of the Board, Mr. Geo. F. Cairns acknowledged sincerely the honour that had been conferred upon him. "It is an honour, that I appreciate and one that I can accept only with a sense of humility, when I consider the sterling work, that has been done by my predecessors in this office," said Mr. Cairns. "I would like to pay my most sincere compliments to Col. Greig, who last year filled that chairmanship to perfection, with honour to himself and dignity to the Board".

"I have always tried to serve this Board faithfully as long as I have been on it and I will continue to do so. This year we must of necessity be careful of our finances. We are forced to call upon the city council for funds necessary for the construction of the new addition to Queen Mary School, which is one of our most pressing needs. This will be the chief item of expenditure during the coming year. During this year I hope we call all work with this same co-operative spirit, that has been existent during the past years and only by adopting for this same support may I be able to carry on."

Chairman Cairnes referred to the loss of several members of the Board who served last year, but pointed out the new members, who have replaced them as being efficient and ready to perform any task, that may be allotted.

"I'll do my best during the coming year, with your help," promised the new chairman.

Opened by Prayer

The evening's meeting was opened by a brief prayer given by the Rev. Beauchamp Payne.

In the monthly report submitted by School Principal F. C. MacLaurin of the Collegiate and Vocational School it was pointed out that two new rooms have been completed by the scholars, following the holidays, and a good beginning has been made for the term's work.

During the past week, R. W. Anglin, B.A., departmental inspector for Collegiate visited the school in the local Collegiate have been found satisfactory, with most of them exceptionally good. Spelling in the first form is similar to that in other schools and writing is a little above average, the report will probably point out. Also appointed, stated Mr. MacLaurin in his report, is a recommendation that the floors of the gymnasia be sanded, smoothed, and finished; and that a heavy grant be given the school library. The matter of sanding the floors was referred to the Sites, Buildings and Repairs Committee, while a sum of $150 was ordered granted the library by the Board, as well as the authorization for the purchase of needed chairs.

It was revealed, that during the past year the total circulation was 2,871 books. In pressing for a larger grant to carry on the library work, MacLaurin pointed out that when the school was first built and the library opened a grant of $250 had been given for the first three years. Then it dwindled down to $100 and he reminded.

"It is very much when we have to buy books and periodicals and keep the library up to date on $50 more this year would help out considerably. Some schools spend from $800 to $1,000 on their libraries, annually. Here our books are getting run off our feet and are badly in need of new bindings," declared the Principal.

900 Use Library

"How many pupils here use the books?" queried Trustee H. E. Pellerin.

Mr. MacLaurin—"Nine hundred —"It seems to me the amount is pretty small," added Mr. Pellerin.

On motion of Trustee H. J. Allin, seconded by Rev. Harold Reid, the sum of $150 for a grant to the local collegiate library was ordered paid.

In a communication addressed to the Board, members of the Kiwanis Club of this city expressed their willingness to take over and equip both playgrounds, releasing the Board from this care. A committee of joint committees to discuss and consider this matter was asked for in the letter signed by H. C. Setters. The request was referred to the Playgrounds Committee.

Members of "The Gideons" will provide free of charge for pupils of the schools all necessary Bibles to make sure that each child is supplied, it was stated in a second communication. It was pointed out in the letter that Sunday school classes were generally too abbreviated, and that the time allowed for this study in schools could be put to good use. The matter was referred to the School Management Committee.

A tuberculosis survey will be undertaken in the local Collegiate Institute in the near future, carried out by experts from the Ontario Department of Health, it was declined by vote of members following a statement of a report on the matter submitted by Rev. Harold Reid, chairman of the Nurses' Committee who completed an exhaustive investigation into the matter. Some preliminary work has been done by the nurses, it was revealed.

Physical Examinations

Chairman Reid pointed out that the matter of this physical examination had been under discussion for last year's Board. "I was asked to investigate and I took charge of the matter myself," he added.

His first interview was with the local Medical Officer of Health. Following this he visited Toronto, where he conferred with officials of the Department of Education, and later referred to the Hon. Dr. J. A. Faulkner, Ontario Minister of Health, visited him at his office.

"Dr. Faulkner gave me every assistance, I explained what I wanted and he promptly called in two of his specialists in tuberculosis. They told me they would be glad to go to any Collegiate and examine the students. The Department of Health is very sympathetic toward this school, and suggested themselves entirely willing to come to Belleville and conduct the survey at a minimum cost to the Board."

"In this survey they will take the whole school, and not just one or the first examination twenty-five per cent or so will be selected. They will go under the X-ray and the films will be read by the expert. Each of this number will then be selected twenty or thirty students, or even a dozen to form the most efficient tuberculosis show. Then they will be given a more thorough examination. If necessary, however, they actually have the first signs of the disease, the family doctor will be advised and proper measures can be taken—we hope—in time. If they have it, they will be sent to their children to Toronto for this clinical test. It would cost them only twenty-five dollars. We can get the whole school tested for less than $300," declared Mr. Reid.

"It is not the fact, that we are overdoing it in calling in these doctors in this matter, but these men, who will be sent here by the government, are experts in their line, they themselves solely to the diagnosis and treatment of this disease and as well, are able to advise of the proper measures to take. The government will take action in this matter to catch every patient advising them of the disease arriving and advising that they sign the subscription for it to be done. If they refuse, then they will not insist upon the examination."

Fire Escape Plans

Trustee Reg Moncrieff pointed out that he wholly in favour of the survey, but wished to have it extended to the public schools also.

"I have been told by the Department, that there are two dangerous fire traps in Belleville. One is where the child is of pre school age and the second when he is about the age of those attending collegiate or collegiate. The Department doesn't want it to come to the attention of children of public school age," enlightened Chairman Reid, in making a motion, that the survey be carried out.

I would like the privilege of seconding the motion," declared the Rev. Beauchamp Payne. "I believe we should keep up with the times. We have a modern building here and we live in modern times. If we would not fulfil the trust, this had been put in us if we turned our backs upon any of the dreadful diseases as tuberculosis. Here is an opportunity for us to do as dollars and cents are concerned, let us economize elsewhere."

"I'd still like the motion to include the public schools in this survey," declared Trustee Moncrieff.

Requested by Chairman Ostrom to express his opinion on the matter, Principal F. C. MacLaurin declared himself in complete sympathy with the survey.

"There is just one little thing about this, and that is some of the parents might object to the examination. If so send a note home that is needed before the survey is commenced is the matter of obtaining the parents regarding the whole scheme. If we launch right out it might scare the pupils and the parents and defeat our own ends. A period of education on the matter, through the press and by other means would ensure a more successful beginning and agreement on their part," declared the principal.

Should Extend Scheme

Trustee H. J. Allin—"The survey is excellent idea, but I believe, that the senior fourth classes in the public schools at least should also be included in this. Some of those children are just as old as some of those Collegiate pupils."

"The principle is splendid. It is a good thing. It involves some expense, but not a great deal," commented Chairman of the Board, Geo. Cairnes. "The benefits from this will be untold. I believe we should start in the Collegiate at least and I heartily approve of the work. In all this we must keep in mind, however, our approach to the city council regarding the new school addition and we must aim ask this year for about $4,000 extra which we have lost by the reduction of grants on the part of the government. But in this survey work the best is indicidental when we consider the good that will be accomplished."

The motion of Rev. Harold Reid and seconded by Rev. Beauchamp Payne that the survey be carried out under the supervision of the Ontario Department of Health was unanimously passed and referred to the Nurses' Committee, with power to act.

Ask For Sidewalk

Again the matter of a sidewalk on the west side of North Front Street, which had been under the car bridge was brought to the attention of the Board as a necessary safety measure for the school children using King George School. To this end a motion: "That city Council be asked to construct the walk from Ridley Terrace to the south side of the street to the city limits", was moved by Trustee H. J. Allin and seconded by W. J. Faulkner.

Under "Enquiries" Trustee Harold Reid commented on the progress made upon the school addition.

"The plans are well progressed and we are almost ready for soliciation," answered Trustee Chas. Hyde, chairman of the Sites, Buildings and Repairs Committee. "One innovation will be the heating plant, with two boilers instead of the customary three. They will cook no more and will be much more efficient. The lighting plan is being prepared by W. Ira Redmond of the General Electric Company, and he will be here on Monday next. Then he is here he will make an inspection of the lighting system in the Collegiate. Mr. Watson is ready with the plans and we are prepared to go ahead with the work right away, after the plans have been reviewed by the Board."

Mayor's Job is Full Time One Says Incumbent

"It's a whole time job; believe me it's a whole time job," commented Mayor Harry Hart, in his executive office at the city hall this morning as he signed a batch of letters and correspondence, that awaited action by the city's chief magistrate, the last cluster of men and a few women outside the Mayor's door, all awaiting their turn for a few personal minutes and the miscellany of other duties and ends, that awaited disposal.

Daily the same routine is gone through with, the Mayor's office shortly before ten o'clock each morning, and then at one o'clock noon before the Mayor manages to clear the decks for lunch, business and turn to his own personal work. Chief among the daily duties are the personal interviews with citizens of all classes, who are on hand seeking favours, advice, or succour for their own personal problems. In addition to these, delegations are kept ringing, all with the stock query: "Is the Mayor there?"

"Believe me, it's a full time job," adds Mayor Hill.

Threshermen Suggest All Weed Seeds Should be Destroyed

Threshermen from throughout the Belleville, Picton, Napanee and Deseronto area gathered at Lindsay on Friday to attend the tenth annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Brotherhood of Threshermen. The convention was presided over by R. McMillan, Hastings president of the organization during 1935. Over 150 members were in attendance.

As a result of the meeting a resolution will be submitted to the Ontario Department of Agriculture asking that it be made compulsory for farmers to destroy weed seeds after threshing or seed cleaning by burying or burning the seeds. This resolution was passed after an address given by J. McLeod of the Crops and Market Branch of the Department.

"SOME DISQUIET"

ness said today in a statement issued 10:15 a.m., (C.S.T. 11:15 E.S.T.):

"The anxiety expressed in the bulletin of last night persists.

Oxygen was brought to Sandringham House yesterday by Lord Dawson of Penn, who with two other of the royal physicians has been in attendance in the palace, ready for urgent call.

While the faithful Nurse Black, with King George all through his serious illness of late 1928, remained near his bedside, Lord Dawson of Penn, Sir Frederick Willis Hewett and Sir Frederick J. Williams stayed in the rooms not far away.

Williams, who lives at Sandringham, left the morning but Lord Dawson and Hewett remained, awaiting the arrival of Sir Maurice Cassidy.

A number of windows of the large, rambling old residence remained lighted all through the snowy, windy night. A bitter east wind whipped the grounds this morning.

Snow appeared from the eaves as villagers and country folk, taken by surprise by learn their beloved monarch was ill, inquired solicitously at the gate concerning his condition.

Special officers were on duty at the gates.

The anxiety of the Norfolk countryside was shared by those in that throughout the country and the Empire.

Thousands Enquire

Thousands of inquires poured into this little village of 700 persons, about 100 miles northeast of London, seeking news of the monarch, the admiration for whom was already near deep and heightened by valiantly during the last year, especially during the Jubilee season, beginning in May, marking the quarter of a century for King George V on the throne.

In a later explanation of the administration of oxygen to the King, a Sandringham official emphasized it was given, not because the King was in danger, but only to assist breathing".

The guarded professional language of the bulletins issued by the King's doctors started a wave of deepest concern.

One medical authority said "when the doctors are really worried".

Remember Anxious Time

The nation and the empire remembered the anxious times and the years ago, when, it was the monarch's life hung in the balance.

For operations to drain fluid from his chest were followed by tense days of waiting, with family and physicians gathered at his bedside.

Sandringham House, which was addressed simply as "Sandringham" the Princess Victoria, sister of the King and one of his favorites.

This was the first visit to Sandringham of the monarch's youngest grandchild, Princess Margaret Rose. The presence there of his two happy grandchildren, Princess Elizabeth and Prince Rose, aided in brightening the King's holiday season before his illness.

The monarch's last active participation in affairs of State was on December 23, when he attended a Privy Council at Sandringham at which Queen Mary received the seal of Foreign Secretary, replacing Sir Samuel Hoare.

Two days later the King delivered his usual Christmas broadcast. A week ago he was believed to be last few Christmas broadcast. A number who have listened to his last few Christmas broadcasts, for with this time his voice seemed to lack its usual vigor.

Sir Maurice Cassidy arrived at the nearby Wolferton Station at 11.40 a.m. (6.40 a.m. E.S.T.) and was met by an automobile from Sandringham.

Plunged in Gloom

Sir Maurice Cassidy, although rarely in the public eye, is a specialist on heart diseases and rheumatism and is held in high esteem by his medical colleagues. He became one of the King's physicians extraordinary in 1932.

This whole peaceful Norfolk, village was plunged into sorrow almost at the news of the sudden illness of its "beloved squire".

One village woman, who saw him visiting only Wednesday said, "The King looked sad as he left the car and I carried to him and the King wished me good day in his usually kindly fashion. We were all shocked when we learned how ill he is."

Many workers, circling over the snow-covered road, hailed outside the gates to-day with sad faces, but saw no signs of activity from the great house.

The Prince of Wales came from London to this royal country seat in Norfolk on his visit was described as at Sandringham House as "ordinary" and it was understood he intended to leave again tomorrow for London.

The anxiety caused by the dire ailment of the King's attack of bronchial catarrh was accompanied by heart weakness, it was declared widely outside the royal household.

The entire British press sampled this development—in view of the monarch's age and the fact the King had been confronted by the strain of Jubilee ceremonies throughout 1935 and grief over the recent death of his sister, Princess Victoria—was the most serious since the King's almost fatal illness in 1928-29 illness.

Remembered With Calls.

Sandringham House was bombarded with telephone inquiries from all parts of the empire and high officials maintained silence and directed their telephones should not be connected for any calls except those from intimate friends of Royal Family.

All week the nation has followed the fight for life of the noted poet and novelist, Rudyard Kipling, who died early today in London's Middlesex Hospital.

The King, the nation as Kipling had inquired from his own sick bed for news of Kipling.

Cheeks close to the Royal House emphasized the King's illness did not result only from the sudden end of pneumonia this week during Sandringham's wintry weather.

The pneumonia set after recovering from his grave illness of 1928 and 1929, has been confined to his chest and the inevitable strain from that previous siege remained, leaving him more susceptible than most persons to sickness.

The King was the third member of the Royal Family to fall ill recently. The Duke of Gloucester was stricken with illness in Sandringham house, the Duke of Gloucester was similarly confined in Buckingham Palace with a sore throat and the Duchess of York was recovering from influenza.

Quiet Holiday.

The King's illness recalled vividly the grim winter days of December, 1928, when his illness forced grave illness arising then from a chill. At that time fever developed, and was followed by congestion of one lung.

Since then, special precautions have been taken to guard His Majesty's health, but he refused to time he has suffered colds.

Last year's Jubilee celebrations, marking the 25th anniversary of the sovereign's accession to the throne imposed considerable strain on his health, involving as they did numerous public appearances and a series of drives through London.

Although he came through this period very well, the King suffered from a severe nasal catarrh in late June while at Sandringham and had to rest for a fortnight.

Prospects Are Good for Large Shipment of Cheese This Year To N. Y. from Napanee Area

Chain Store Buyer in Market for 12,500 Boxes

DESIRE SOFT CHEESE

Prospects for increased trade among United States buyers within the near future are cheering cheesemakers of the Napanee district.

W. H. Dillelbeck, president of the Central Ontario Cheesemakers' Association has recently received requests from Mr. W. F. McAdam of Henderson, New York, chain grocery store buyer, for information regarding the purchase of a large quantity of cheese from factories of the Napanee area.

Mr. McAdam expects to visit Napanee in the near future to make arrangements, if possible, with factories for supplying his company with the required quantity of their product. The chain stores for which he is buyer number 150 and use approximately 1,000,000 pounds of cheese or 12,500 boxes each year. The type of cheese which will be required is a soft cheese different from the ordinary cheddar, that the United States market is making slight changes in processing.

Cheese at present in New York is selling at 18 cents wholesale, it is stated, which would net the Canadian producer about 13 cents. This firm which Mr. McAdam represents has accredited the willingness to pay cash before delivery.

RUDYARD KIPLING

He was stricken last Sunday night at Brown's Hotel and hastened to the private Woolvington wing of Middlesex Hospital in Mortimer Central "Old Soho" district for the operation from which he at first rallied but soon drew downward.

Kipling got a start on the road to fame through the Duke of Connaught, uncle of the King and a former Governor-General of Canada.

The Duke was a Major-General in the British army in the Punjab in 1886 when he visited Kipling's father, then principal of the art school in Lahore. Struck with the latter's sheets, the Duke, then but 20, he offered to do anything to help him.

Said Kipling: "I would like sir, to live with the army for a time, to go to the frontier and write of Tommy Atkin."

His wish was granted and it was as a result of that experience that Kipling wrote "Departmental Ditties" and "Plain Tales From the Hills."

Worked on Newspaper

His early career included newspaper work with the Allahabad Pioneer. Later he came to England, travelled in the United States and Publication of "Plain Tales From the Hills" there brought him recognition almost overnight and his reputation soon was established.

Before the turn of the century Kipling spent some years in the United States and also travelling around the world. Results of the latter experience in his "Letters of Travel." It included a visit to Vancouver in which he described its harbor, with its background of mountains as one of the great sights of the world.

One theme which ran through the numerous tributes which his death evoked was that Kipling was a story-teller was considered as probable his foremost distinction. His poetry he brought a new technique and a new music to verse and much of his poetry perhaps more popular than ever before with the younger generation. Children also revelled in his "jungle book" and "just so stories."

For many years past he had lived in virtual retirement in the quiet village of Burwash, Sussex, a passage of the curious which had interrupted the tenor of his life in earlier years.

Villagers added their tributes to those of the nation and empire to-day.

Poet of Empire.

Although the formal honor of Poet Laureateship came to him he was hailed everywhere as "the poet of empire".

Kipling's fame was the first Englishman to receive the Nobel Prize for literature, which in 1907, the selection came as a bombshell to those critics who discovered him before reading from jingoism to hack journalism.

Born Dec. 30, 1865, in Bombay, India, Kipling was the son of John Lockwood Kipling, author and architectural sculpture in the British School of Art at Bombay, and of Alice Macdonald, sister of Lady Baldwin, wife of Premier Baldwin.

Lou Angeles, Jan. 18 (CP) — Vera Blake and Don Parker, song writers who created the popular melody, "Here Comes the Bride" have decided their marriage is all out of tune. Miss Blake filed suit for divorce Friday, charging mental cruelty and intolerance.

They were married last Nov. 4.

Sent Home to England

Sent home to school in England when he was six, young Rudyard attended Westward Ho School, which fitted him for the background for "Stalky and Co." His formative years, like those of other stock-enforcing, the use of thick speeches, and the rough lesson, but even with these he was unable to see clearly.

In 1882 he returned to India, and for seven years was an ink-splashed pale-editor pundit of Lahore and Allahabad, gaining fame in the country by writing on the life of the British soldier in India. Then he tried America.

He founded his fortune in 1889 and made his way slowly across the continents, trying to find a place for himself in newspapers. He later said he always was rebuffed without a chance to speak for himself.

Youth in Garret.

In 1891 he returned to England and almost starved in a London garret until he found a publisher for a new collection of his "Plain Tales of the Hills". It and his trunkful of Indian campfire tales of the period sold like hot cakes.

Money permitted him to indulge the wanderlust that had driven him from India and in 1892 he roamed Cevlon, Japan and the United States.

In New York he looked up Wolcott Balestier, a young New York author, with whom he had shared chambers on the Thames embankment—and fell in love with Balestier's sister, Caroline.

They were married, and after a wedding trip to Japan, Kipling and his wife settled in Brattleboro, Vt., where he wrote more than twenty volumes.

Son Lost In War.

There his two children were born. But autograph seekers sent him into flight and he moved to the Sussex downs.

His son Lt. John Kipling, only 18, was killed in the battle of Loos. The sorrowing father endowed a perpetual fund for sounding at Loos "Last Post".

"Mutiny on the Bounty"

Charles Laughton, Clark Gable, and Franchot Tone Share Honors In Year's Big Picture

"Mutiny on the Bounty," the world's greatest motion picture at the Belle now until Wednesday, matinee daily, carries one away with the sheer intensity of its drama.

Although a historical romance, wrung from the actual facts of the British Admiralty, it is far more absorbing than pure fiction.

It is a superb achievement in cinematography, a historical record as it should be and one that will live for years to come as one of the most exciting sea tales ever screened.

Tells a True Story

The picture is the true story of the voyage of the H.M.S. Bounty 150 years ago, on a scientific expedition to the South Seas. It tells of the tyranny of a brutal captain who drove his crew to mutiny, of the life and loves of the sailors in tropical paradise and the dogged pursuit of Captain Bligh by the mutineers who led him to the wrath of the sea by casting him adrift in an open boat.

Mutiny on the Bounty is the epic to all time of the pirate that has shouted the picture's merits around the world in the past few months. Sometimes stark and cruel, is unquestioned. Its cast includes Charles Laughton, Clark Gable and Franchot Tone, is incomparable.

Nor can the brilliant direction of Frank Lloyd, still remembered for "Cavalcade," be overlooked. Here is the same great hand, the same movement, the feeling of realism and intelligence in mass movement. Never for one second does the director permitted the tense adventurous excitement of his story to obscure the fact that his players were real, living people rather than mere screen characters.

Photography is Superb

In his photography, by far the most superb sea photography to have been filmed, Arthur Edeson has given every scene the breath of salt air. The storm and wreck scenes are the most realistic ever photographed.

Although two years in preparation and one year in the filming, "Mutiny on the Bounty" lives up to every expectation that has been created by it.

To enjoy "Mutiny on the Bounty," it is important to see it from the beginning. This special attraction starts daily at 2.00, 7.10 and 9.20, commencing over two hours in the telling. Performances start daily at 2.30, 7.00 and 9.20 p.m.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Little Big Shot"

With 4 Star Cast, Comedy, Drama and Romance Abound

The featured cast is headed by Sybil Jason and includes Glenda Farrell, Robert Armstrong and Edward Norris. Sybil Jason is a curly-haired baby star, five and a half years old, who was born in Hollywood, South Africa, taken to London by her nurse at the age of two, discover, where she made an instantaneous hit, and stole the two reels in which she appeared in "Barnacle Bill," and "Dance Band." Her success was so marked that Warner Bros. signed her to play the leading role in "Little Big Shot" in which she sings, dances and mimics, and astonished Hollywood by her acting ability. She is responsible for much of the laughing as well as the tender moments in the picture.

Glenda Farrell, contrary to her usual chiseling roles, plays the part of a girl with a real heart of gold and she still something of a wise cracker who is completely sophisticated, knowing the ways of men.

Robert Armstrong and Edward Everett Horton furnish much of the fun as two near crooks who befriend the lady and the child. Horton is entirely reformed through their influence while Bobby Jason is on their hands by a gangster just before he is put on the spot.

Others in the more important roles include Jack LaRue, Arthur Hoyt, Ward Bond, Addison Richards, Emma Dunn, Ward Bond and Tammany Young.

The picture is a thrilling drama from which comic situations, comedy, pathos and romance. It has as its background the colorful Gay Nineties and Barbary Coast period of San Francisco.

Music and lyrics are by Al Jolson and Mort Dixon.

On the same bill on Sunday and Monday and Tuesday of this week we will see, and hear, Bing Crosby on the piano only Bing's having companions will be eligible to receive pianos to follow on Monday or Tuesday.

Today George Arliss is seen in one of his most pleasing pictures which has graced Capitol screen, in the unanimous decision of critics.

Also today only showing Shirley Temple in Fox Movietone comedy news, serial and cartoon.

THE LOST FOUND

There is nothing which so stirs the heart of mankind as to hear of the rescue of persons in distress. The story of the lost which has been found is an everlasting romance to man. Its appeal for the man and the woman, the boy and the girl never fails. Its note is found in fairy story, in novel and in drama. It is the theme of lyric and epic poetry.

The discovery that Lincoln Ellsworth and his pilot Herbert Hollick-Kenyon are alive and well was the thrilling news which came yesterday from the cold south polar wastes. Lost for two months, these brave men who dare the eternal winter of Little America, have lived their life there in the confidence of their return.

Another great story was brought out of the South Polar area years ago, the story of the ill-fated Scott expedition and the glorious sacrificial death of the explorer Scott, whose name will go down in history forever.

Polar areas of course attract the most notice in these rescues on account of the desolation and the thousand and one dangers which beset the lost. Similar are the islands in the sea, such as that on which Robinson Crusoe is supposed to have lived for years, a story of pure fiction which has proved the best perennial and verdant tale in literature.

PROVINCE TAXES INCOME

There is not a municipality in Ontario which is not watching the legislation bound up in the new provincial income tax, for all municipalities are interested, those which have been levying the tax and have now had the power taken from them, and those which did not. Those which did levy, know they are going to get as a provincial grant an amount equivalent to what they received last year and possibly a little more. But the municipalities which have not been levying the tax and have been letting their residents who have good incomes escape will now feel the pinch for these fortunates are going to have to pay a tax into the province and that much money goes out of their localities. Whether the latter will receive a grant from the Provincial treasury is a matter yet to be settled.

It is said that one point on which all income taxpayers will be agreed is this that the provincial tax measure allows the federal tax to be deducted from income on which the provincial tax is to be paid. The hint is made that the federal tax ought to allow for the deduction of the provincial tax also, so that the tax will be less.

Whatever tax is meant to bring the province $15,000,000 besides what is raised to be returned to municipalities which have been deprived of that form of income somebody is going to pay this. The Hon. David Croll, acting Premier, estimates that 3,000 persons will bear eighty or ninety per cent of it.

Whatever faults the tax may have and doubtless before the Legislature is long in session the people will hear many an argument against it as well as much in favor of it, there is to be equality as to payment of tax. Some municipalities for some reason or other have allowed their fixed income recipients to escape income tax while other municipalites have used the tax and those liable to pay have had to pay at the rate of the municipal tax rate, which varied from place to place. On the other hand the greatly increased taxes on those with incomes in the heavier brackets will no doubt cause stiff opposition. The method of collection under the federal machinery is praised in many quarters.

Have municipal income taxes forced residents to take up residence outside in the non-taxed areas? It is claimed that this is the case and that therefore suburbs have sprung up which enjoy practically all the advantages of city life without the income tax burdens.

In some quarters suggestion is made that the federal and provincial taxes should not be collected at one and the same time because to the heavy taxpayers this may be a real hardship.

The private business tax is not allowed to be exempted. This used to be deducted from the municipal tax on personal income.

One thing is clear, municipalities cannot afford to lose taxes and for that reason are to be compensated for municipal income losses.

As men pore over their income statements and finger over the bills they must pay or write the cheques in settlement of the tax, some cannot help but dream of those peaceful halcyon days when no one paid income tax. Against this is the present argument that there should always have been an income tax. But some will sigh for the tax-free days gone, likely never to return.

Depend upon it, if a man talks of his misfortunes, there is something in them that is not disagreeable to him; for where there is nothing but pure misery, there never is any mention of it.—Johnson.

THE LONG ROAD

Over the Hill the long road winds
Stark 'neath a staring moon;
Leading to what each surely finds
Tho' it be late or soon.

From dawn to sunset, all the way,
The dusty road has led
Thro' fields that wooed us to delay,
With sun-kissed moments fled.

Moments to memory ever dear,
When life seemed free from care;
When youth and love and friends were near,
Whose loss is hard to bear.

Yet we must on, tho' echoes come
Whene'er the wind is still;
Tho' slower pulses throbbing drum
Our way up to the hill.

Tho' fain we'd pause awhile, the road
Unending calls us on
As tho' Life pricked us with a goad,
Our goal to look upon.

What shall we find when comes the thrill
Of gazing from the crest?
Will there be still another hill
Our heart and mind to test?

Or does the road go circling round
Back whence we made our start?
From moon, or stars, or sky, no sound;
No answer they impart.

Only the distant hilltop lures,
The white road curves and bends,
That we must tread while life endures,
To where all dreaming ends.

Montreal. —W. J. King.

NO WASTE SPACE IN THIS GREAT FAMILY JOURNAL writes "Old Subscriber", who states that every page of this newspaper is interesting, compact and condensed, giving the news and views required without sprawling over acres of white paper. Says he the Jumbo sheets of the big cities are just so much padding, requiring the local reader to wade through a mass of stuff he has no interest in to find the stuff he is interested in—also a lot of flamboyant ads which do not interest him at all as he has no possibility of patronizing distant advertisers. The home paper is quite suits to everything in it interests him because it is all home material that he knows all about—and the advertisements are interesting and valuable because he knows every advertiser and his reputation to a fareyewell, and can reach the place of business any time in a short time.

Particularly, says Old Subscriber, do I like the modern features, which are interesting and entertaining. For instance, Scott's Scrapbook, by R. J. Scott, which he cuts out of the paper and pastes in a scrapbook for his own—the result being a volume of useful information, illustrated, secured at very little cost. Take the picture of the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem, for instance, says he, showing the fifteen lamps which burn over the silver star "under which Christ was born." Six of the lamps belong to the Greeks, five to the Armenians and four to the Roman Catholics. "Tended by followers of the various sects the lamps are never allowed to go out and many of them have been burning consecutively for hundreds of years."

How many of the Sidelight Family knew that before—we must confess that we didn't. Just another item of interesting and valuable information added to the store of what we have. Hence it is wise to read "Scott's Scrapbook" which appears regularly in this newspaper, in addition to other instructive features like treading the "Danger Trails" with those very interesting people the Martin Johnson's, who take us into the jungles of South Africa, make us acquainted with the tiny Bushmen, the giant gorillas and other strange jungle folk. Also the adventures of Tarzan the Ape Man, who fears neither man or beast and takes his readers through more thrills than it were possible to imagine.

There are other valuable features too, written for the Ontario Intelligencer and a selectd group of newspapers, which include advice on how to live to the best advantage from medical specialists and psychiatrists, articles to women on love, marriage, and housekeeping—in short into each day's copy of this newspaper, is packed more of the interesting and educational than could be obtained in a large printed volume produced at a cost of ten dollars per volume or more in the days before modern invention made the modern newspaper more than a newspaper—an education.

Old Subscriber's Scrapbook idea is interesting—think it over.

R. B. BURROWS

An important factor in the life of Belleville for more than half a century has been the business activities of two pushing and progressive individuals in the persons of Stephen Burrows and his son Sanford R. Burrows. Stephen Burrows was one of the first to recognize the possibilities of life insurance and the great benefit to humanity conferred through insurance in providing for the widow and orphan when the breadwinner loses his earning capacity through illness accident or death. Stephen Burrows elevated a haphazard, part-time business to a high plane and established the business upon a firm foundation over half a century ago. He chose the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada for the foundation of his insurance business and proceeded to build a structure of local insurance thereon which has never been surpassed under similar conditions in Canada. The Mutual Life was established in 1869 and its home office is in Waterloo, Ontario.

For twenty-five years Sanford R. Burrows was associated with his father in the business and in 1893 took over the management, giving the necessary vigor of youth to the large business which his father had worked up. In 1933 Sanford R. Burrows took complete charge of the business and has since conducted it with great and increasing success injecting modern and keen and progressive ideas and associating with him energetic young men insurance men eager to contribute the best of talents to the ever-growing business concern.

"Barrows of Belleville"

Sixteen Burrows attained such eminence and popularity in the business of insurance in Ontario that he was known far and wide as "Barrows of Belleville," seldom being hailed by any other name, the publicity alike for himself and the city of his choice, which he appreciated.

For more than thirty years the Burrows firm was identified with the Canadian Pacific Railway passenger service here, and also enjoyed the increasing insurance business caused them to relinquish the railway agency.

The fifty-five years Stephen Burrows represented Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada in Belleville and was one of the oldest and most esteemed representatives in the company. Sanford R. Burrows has come up through the ranks and gained his business education in the school of hard knocks to the end that he has developed keen efficiency and a high degree, and a personal popularity based upon intelligent fair dealing. Aside from business he is prominent in Masonic circles and a keen golfer and curler of tentative social clubs. besides being very active in the Belleville unit of the Rotary Club where his outstanding vocal talents are used to great advantage. To Rotarians of Canada and the United States he is "Sandy" and to Rotarians is more popular or more widely known.

Mr. Burrows is also a member of the Board of Directors of the Ontario Hockey Association.

Modern Offices

Outgrowing the original quarters at 251 Front Street, Belleville, Mr. Burrows has had the upper floor remodelled and modernized into a suite of offices which are commodious, richly finished in hard wood and most convenient for the staff as well as patrons. No expense has been spared in the remodelling and the result is a handsome suite of offices as can be found anywhere. A large office, facing Front Street, is the private business domicile of the head of the concern, S. R. Burrows, Branch Manager, and this opens out into the general office, with separate entrance. Then there is a fine office for P. C. McGuire, Agency Supervisor, an energetic young insurance man, popular with all who know him.

The personnel of the Belleville office and agents and outside representatives is as follows:

GRUESOME CASE TOLD TO COURT

Car in Mad Career Kills Three And Injures Same Number

LONDON, Jan. 18.—(CP)—A fearful safety lesson was taught in County Police Court where an inquest into the deaths of Clifford Hodgins and Ernest Dennis, killed in a motor accident last Halloween night, was held.

Mayer Lerner, who conducted the examination of witnesses for the Crown, told the Coroner's jury before his retirement that Hodgins "committed suicide" and Dennis "committed murder."

Mr. Lerner said: "If people could see the battered bodies of these victims in the hospitals . . .

Coroner Dr. Harold Henderson: "And the bodies dead in the morgues . . . "

Mr. Lerner: "They would think twice about it before driving dangerously. This has been the most gruesome case in police experience."

Mad Career of Car

Six people were in the car, that skidded 177 feet on the pavement at the start of an "S" curve; skidded another 130 feet on the dirt shoulder; crashed into a concrete culvert; tore a 9,000-pound section of concrete out of the place in which reinforcing steel bar had held it; threw the concrete mass 19 feet.

The car then hurtled 40 feet through the air before it touched the ground again. The details were supplied by Inspector T. G. P. Saunby, Traffic Officer for the division.

The evidence of three victims, Doris McFalls, Gertrude Evans and Malcolm Kerr, was taken yesterday in Dr. Joseph Hodgins' farm, according to evidence, was impaled on the steering wheel "like a piece on a butcher's hook"—and hung there until taken down. Miss Evans was found dead first in a wheat-filled culvert.

Verdict of the jury was the wreck was "due to the car being driven at an excessive rate of speed."

NEW BOARD CHAIRMAN

Mr. George F. Ostrom who was unanimous choice of fellow members of the Board of Education at the inaugural meeting held last evening. Mr. Ostrom brings with him to the highest honor of the Board, a record of long years of service on the local city council, during which he has successfully filled the chairmanship of the Executive Committee, Board of Management and Board of Control for eight years on the Board of Education. He is an Past President of the local Y.M.C.A. 30 YEARS AGO

January 18th, 1906

A former Bellevillian now resident in Boston, Mass., writes as follows: "Monday evening the boys of old Belleville now in Greater Boston, gathered at the American House to renew acquaintances, talk over days gone by and friends at home—for they all consider Belleville home—and have a dinner. The room was decorated with the Dominion and United States flags, and for five hours the boys talked as only those can who have not met for years. There were no speeches, as all wished to talk at once of the good old days; stories were told that brought back to memory those happy days, and some met for the first time in twenty years. Those at the gathering were Geo. E. Harris, New York; Will H. Johnson, Arlington Heights, Will Carnew, Jim S. Johnson, Brookline; Arthur Johnson, Boston; Fred J. Lingham, Arlington Heights; W. Clarence Sills, Somerville; Jim A. Wensley and Arthur A. Wensley, Lynn; Jack J. Foley, son of Mr. James Foley of the G.T.R., Belleville. The boys will have another dinner in the near future."

The Sergeants' Mess of the 15th Battalion will hold a ball in the Oddfellows' Hall on the night of Feb. 17th.

There was a very large market this morning. Hay sold at $13 to $16. There was a large quantity of beef offered at from 3c to 4½c per pound by the quarter.

Mr. John L. McGuire of Madoc was a visitor in the city to-day.

50 Years Ago

January 18th, 1886

The Rev. H. G. Parker of this city has left for the Sandwich Islands to be gone two years. He will make a circuit of the globe before returning.

The people of the Congregational church on Hotel Street celebrated the first anniversary of the arrival of their present pastor, the Rev. Mr. Hall, on a free tea meeting. From reports of the church officials it was shown that the congregation had doubled during the past year; the attendance at the Sunday School increased from seven to one hundred, and the finances are in a satisfactory condition. Addresses were made by the Rev. Hewitt, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Bogle, the pastor and others.

So remarked a friend of this well known palladium of news and truth. We did not dispute the statement. We dislike arguments, and the statement contains more truth than poetry, so let it stand as read.

However, and apropos, and all that, here's an interesting letter which came to a Belleville merchant this week, which is self-explanatory. No doubt some of our Old Timers will recognize the names of Belleville Old Boys in the letter. Here 'Tis:

Belleville, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Moores:

Enclosed please find the equivalent of fifty cents (50c) for which please send me two pounds of your 15c candy advertised in the Ontario Intelligencer November 23rd.

This candy will make the rounds as there are several Belleville boys, who take the paper every day and who are very anxious to taste some of our home town candy "that tickles the palate." Mr. Wescott, formerly of Stirling, and Ken DeMille, formerly resident to the Second Dave Lawson, postmaster, will be two of the numbers.

It has been 38 years since I left your beautiful city and I still hold very fond memories.

Stirling and District

Stirling—A great deal of interest was shown in the evening service on Sunday Jan. 12th at St.Paul's United Church when the ladies of the Missionary Society elected an international Missionary pageant with a large cast of characters, who took their parts in a very efficient manner. The three churches within the union were represented by ladies of the Society in the following manner:—Mrs. Wait, Congregational; Mrs. R. W. Rowland, Presbyterian church and Mr. R. A. Patterson the former Methodist church. The pageant followed the achievement of each of these separate churches up until the time of union. Their undertaking work in the various mission fields were displayed in a panoramic fashion as children garbed in the native costume of many lands gathered at the platform and joined in the singing of several missionary hymns. With splendid effect the past clearly portrayed a forecast of the possibilities of the future was given to the audience with the union of those three powerful forces for the furthering of God's Kingdom on earth. Mrs. R. G. Lawlor was in charge of the service and the effective lesson was read by Mrs. Roy Griffin and Mrs. Wait led the class in prayer. Several other members of the W. M. S. officiated as ushers. Special music in keeping with the missionary spirit was rendered by the choir under the leadership of Mr. G. L. Cluff. The service was very largely attended and the splendid spiritual, social and educational substance was of great benefit to all.

Stirling, January 17.—(Special)—The newly formed hockey team of Stirling brought rounds of cheers and applause from the fans at the Stirling arena on Thursday night, when they staved off the fast Madoc team in sixty minutes of thrilling hockey to win their second game of the season by the score of 2-0. The game left nothing to be desired from a fan's standpoint. Throughout the first two periods both teams gave evidence of a display of fast, clean hockey, forty minutes without a penalty. The tension increased however, and in the final period things boiled wide open and Referee Adams had to call several stiff penalties to keep the game under control.

Lady luck played the Madoc team foul early in the game, when the puck glanced off a Madoc player's skate into his own net to put the Stirling team out in front on an unearned goal. Madoc fought hard for the tying goal but Morton turned them back repeatedly. Stirling's defence broke away many a fine rush. Both teams were penalized five times in two periods without a penalty and Stirling looked to have a slight edge on the play. The first period was pretty slow hockey. Marmora had many more shots at the goal than Tweed but no goals were scored and no penalties were meted out.

In the second period the teams were somewhat better organized but again no scoring. Two penalties were handed out, one to O'Neill of Marmora and one to Thomson of Tweed, both for tripping.

The first goal of the game was scored in the third period when Colton rapped it in behind Gray, the Marmora goalie. In a few minutes the second goal was scored when Cronkwright rushed down the ice and play and passed to Burridge, in front of the net, who put it in. evening the score be 1-1. Both teams played better hockey in this period than as in the rest of the game Marmora had the edge in play with Shannon, Burridge and Leonard her outstanding forwards. Arnold also was the defence for Tweed and Tumbury and Green headed forward. The fourth period opened with both teams on their toes all the time. New features? You get them ALL . . . in the 1936 HUDSONS and TERRAPLANES

"There's a car that can GO, and KEEP ON going!"

IT'S NO SURPRISE to those who know automobiles to see the rapidly increasing number of new car buyers who are choosing Hudsons and Terraplanes . . . and buying now.

First, because they 'get' all the really new and important features that date Hudson and Terraplane a year or more ahead of other cars. Second, because in buying now they have a new car that will stay new, months longer. The year's best automobile investment!

Size? Many cars priced hundreds of dollars higher fall far short of Hudson and Terraplane in size, wheelbase, overall length. None in their own price ranges can equal them. Or in passenger room and storage space for baggage, with enclosed spare tire lying flat.

Style? Here is the only really distinctive new design in the medium and low price field. The beauty of Hudsons and Terraplanes is speaking for itself on the streets of cities and towns throughout Canada.

Safety? Only Hudson and Terraplane have Radial Safety Control (patent applied for) — a revolutionary principle that makes riding, steering and stopping safer. The same is true of Tru-Line Steering—the Rhythmic Ride; and the Electric Hand Optional at slight extra cost.

Brakes? No other car gives you—Duo-Automatic Hydraulic Brakes. Latest and finest hydraulics, with a separate safety braking system that makes them automatically if ever needed. Two complete braking systems, operated by one brake pedal.

Bodies? All of steel, reinforced inside with steel, with seamless roof of solid steel — formed in no other popular car.

And, pay what you will, no car develops such power on so little gasoline as Hudson and Terraplane. And owners report amazing durability, with mileages 150,000, 200,000 and even more.

Ask for proof of that, then convince yourself—behind the wheel. Let us show you.

Obituary

LATE W. A. OWENS (Commercial)

On Tuesday, January 14th a large and representative group of friends gathered at the home of the late Mr. W. A. Owens to pay their last tribute of respect and affection to an honoured friend and a worthy citizen.

The service was conducted by the Rev. Dr. James Semple his minister, assisted by Rev. Dr. Baker, a friend of many years.

The beautiful burial service of the United Church and two appropriate hymns were read by Dr. Semple followed by prayer.

Dr. Baker spoke briefly of his friendship with Mr. Owens and his outstanding qualities and character, which made him a devoted husband, a kind friend, a worthy citizen and a real Christian.

Dr. Semple chose as the basis of his remarks the unusual but appropriate words "Thou wilt be missed because thy sun will be empty" from II Samuel 18-14.

The subject was developed as follows—He will be missed and his seat will be empty. Dr. Semple spoke on the members of the family home, its love and harmony and devotion of its members for one another. While he would be missed by friends, he would be sorely missed in the home and especially by his invalid wife to whom he had ministered with loving care and tender care. In the second place he would be missed in the church, for his zeal and devotion. Tribute was paid to the loyalty of Mr. Owens to his church and the inspiration that came to the minister from his presence in his pew. Concerned about the interest always manifested in the service. He would also be missed in the community and among his friends, where he was wont to meet in social intercourse.

A wealth of flowers added beauty to the simplicity and dignity of the service.

PETER O'NEILL (Thurlow)

After an illness of nearly two weeks' duration Peter O'Neill a well known and highly respected resident of the 1st concession of Thurlow, passed away at his late residence on Friday evening, Jan. 10th.

The late Mr. O'Neill would have been 72 years of age tomorrow, Jan. 19th. He was born at Barrie ville, Hungerford Township, his parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas O'Neill. For some years he resided at Lonsdale, but for the past nineteen years he had made his home in the 1st concession of Thurlow Township, being engaged in farming. He was a faithful member of St. Michael's Church, Belleville, and by all who knew him he was most highly esteemed.

Surviving to mourn his loss are his widow, whose maiden name was Miss Nellie Larkin; one son, Mr. Harry O'Neil, Thurlow Township; one daughter, Mrs. Patrick Smith, Lonsdale; one sister, Mrs. B. Murphy, Dakota.

The funeral will take place on Monday morning, Jan. 20th. to MARYVILLE.

CHRIST CHURCH GUILD

The first business meeting of the year was held Tuesday. The chapel was filled to capacity, Mrs. Hickey opened with the singing of hymn "Take my life and let it be consecrated Lord to Thee" followed by prayer, Reports were read by Secretary, Mrs. Sprung, and Treasurer, Mrs. Mount. The several conveners of groups had through various activities been able to augment the treasury over $400.00 during the year's work.

The Rector, Rev. G. Wright, presided for election of officers and paid high tribute to Mrs. Hickey's powers of leadership, which was heartily acknowledged by the members.

Plans were formulated for work in the coming month.

Picton and District

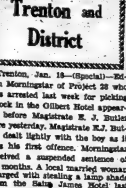
Picton, Jan. 18—On Thursday at noon, returning from the May Street School, Douglas, ten year old son of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Fournie, received serious injury, when the bob sleigh on which he was riding with two boys of the same age, collided with a car, driven by Mr. Salter Owens at the foot of Ayers' Hill, where the road turns to Main Street. Douglas was thrown violently against the wheel of the car, which had slowed down to a very low rate of speed. He received injury to the right side of his face, his face was badly bruised, and a cut in his chin required several stitches. Miss Mary Nicholson, a kindergarten assistant, who was an eye witness of the accident, reported it, and the child was removed to the office of Dr. Pulsifer, and later to the local hospital for many plates. Sand on the road caused the sleigh to swerve, and it turned out to pass the car, and Douglas who was sitting up on the back of the sleigh, was catapulted against the car. The driver of the car accompanied the child to the doctor, and was not blamed in any way for the accident. Principal VanDoit has since forbidden the bringing of sleighs to school, as the children have been riding down hills at the steep main hills, forgoing and returning from school.

After hearing a great deal of evidence on Saturday and Thursday, at the Court House before Judge Farrell of Kingston the case of Wm. Henley, asking damages of one thousand dollars from Roland Borte, for injuries and losses resulting from a car accident on Sept. 19th last, the case was laid over until Tuesday, Jan. 21st, when more evidence will be taken. The Henley car was driven by Miss Frances Thompson, and Mrs. Henley, a passenger in the car was injured about the head, leg and ankle. Both cars were badly damaged. The plaintiff, Henley, charges that Borte was driving at a fast rate of speed, and was on the wrong side of the road, until he was almost upon the other car.

The staff of the local C.D.S. have received invitations to the first annual fancy dress ball, at the Napanee C.D.S. to be held in Napanee on the evening of Jan. 22nd.

Mr. Harold Collier of Toronto is ill at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Collier, Paul Street.

The monthly tea of the evening auxiliary of the United Church held on Wednesday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. C. E. Goodwin, King Street, was largely attended, and proved a very enjoyable affair.



WORMS

AFFECT MANY CHILDREN

These dangerous, disgusting parasites cause a general run down condition, the child has no appetite, craves for different foods and sweets, is feverish, grinds his teeth, sleeps badly, sometimes has nose, ears, intestinal or anal itching, and often has worms. Only too often children suffer for months as worms are given the wrong treatment. Stomach remedies, vermifuges, pills, purgatives, etc., rarely remove worms, they must be killed. Careful mothers are always on the watch for the above symptoms and treat them on the very suspicion of them with Mulrooney's famous remedy—

Dufferin Home and School Club

The regular monthly meeting of the Dufferin Home and School Club was held in the auditorium of the school with the president in the chair and a very large attendance present. The meeting opened with the singing of one verse of "O Canada." The treasurer's report showed a balance on hand of $48.91. The "Hall of Fame" class for attendance of parents was won by Miss Hayes' room. The regular euchre and bridge is to be held on January 31st, the proceeds going to the new library fund. Games are in charge of the second Vice-President Mrs. Bridgeford. It was announced that the purpose of the Home and School Club was for the staff, school boards and parents to gather together each month and second Friday of each month and urged the parents to discuss their views and problems of each meeting. A very delightful musical programme followed reading "The Irish Cook" by Marion Boulter, Trenton, and accompanying by six girls from Miss Hayes class, Betty Mae Hubbard, Mary Wood, Norma Smith, Josie Funnell, Lina MacKenzie and Marie Gainsorth, accompanied by Wesley Hubbard, Trenton, on harmonica solos by Lois Bonter; dialogue, "The Village Leaper", by five pupils, Lillian Taft, Jean Wiggins, Freda Bonter, Gerald Flood and Donald Burt. The guest speaker was Mr. Howard Graham K. Police Report

This is a brief summary of the Trenton Police Department from January 1st, 1935 to December 31st, 1935. There were 464 cases disposed of and 27 cases which were not disposed of. There were 19 motor cars stolen during the year valued at $13500.00 all of which were recovered. Nineteen bicycles were also stolen valued at $309.00. Nine of these were recovered valued at $160.00. During the year other property estimated to the value of $918.19 was reported as stolen of which property to the value of $500.00 was recovered. Loss reported to owners leaving a deficit of property estimated at the sum of 605.00. This deficit is due to a large extent, because of those convicted not being able to make good the goods pledged and money stolen. Goods to the value of $1500.00 were reported as lost, this includes $550.00 in cash reported lost by two citizens in Trenton. A reward was offered for the recovery of this money but brought no results. Cloth to the value of $150.20 was recovered. Other goods to the value of $338.75 was found and returned to owners. Property and motor cars to the value of $4000.00 was recovered by the outside Police Forces. There were 2210 homeless persons who were provided shelter and other accommodation at the Police station during the year. There were ten children lost and brought to the Police station and kept until their parents were located.

67 Motor Accidents

There were sixty-seven motor accidents in which sixteen persons were injured, some seriously and one only slightly. There were twenty-three accidents reported in which six persons were injured and seven were killed. Accidents but sudden deaths were investigated. There were six inquests held.

Financial Statement

Fines and costs were imposed to the amount of $4797.25 of which $2294.00 was paid to the town, $82.00 to the Provincial and Dominion Governments and the balance $1416.20 was not paid. This represented fines and costs imposed upon fifty-five persons who were committed to jail in default of payment. In addition to the above the sum of $4220.00 was collected for dogs and $1350.50 for guns, knives, liquors, tobacco, pool rooms, laundries and restaurants. This makes a total of $4148.50.

Chief Constable William Bain has expressed his appreciation of the co-operation given the Police Department by the citizens of Trenton and pointed out that there is at this time a serious increase in crime and it is the duty of every citizen to assist the police force at all times to stamp out crime, as a police force can only operate efficiently with the backing and aid of its citizens.

The Chief also expressed deep regret concerning the handicap under which the force have worked during the past year owing to the illness of one of the most efficient members of the staff, who has served the community for the past sixteen years. At the present time new members are being trained and we feel sure, that shortly will be a credit to the community.

New York, Jan. 18 (CP)—Veteran engineers of the Erie Railroad—who have spent much of their lives piloting locomotives—came to town for a convention and went for it ride on the subway. "Just thought we wanted to cased final new subway," commented Mr. E. Correll, head of the veterans' organization.

Unhampered by trains, the entire group planned to take another three-hour ride today.

Would you punish a child for this?

SHOULD a child be spanked when he refuses to take a laxative he hates?

Millions of mothers say: "NO!" They believe in the modern theory of working with the child—not against him. So when their children need a laxative they use an all youngsters love to take—CASTORIA!

Do you know that even the taste of Castoria is made especially for children? It's one laxative they take without struggling. And don't forget—important. For the gagging a child undergoes when forced to take a bad-tasting laxative can often seriously upset his digestion. And, in the end, may do more harm than good.

But good taste is only one reason why you should use Castoria when children need aid in elimination. Another reason is . . . Castoria is SAFE, gentle—yet thorough.

Unlike some "purge" laxatives, Castoria has no strong, purging drugs. It won't form a habit—and it will never, never cause griping, cramping pains. It is the ideal children's laxative—from babyhood to 11 years.

It's wise to keep Castoria handy, always. You can buy it at any druggist's. Get the thrifty Family Size bottle tonight.

A Torpid Liver Brings Many Ills

All down through the history of medical treatment runs the thought idea that by keeping the liver healthy and active you escape many of the common ills of life and some of the most serious and most painful diseases as well.

A healthy liver filters poisons from the blood and converts them into bile which as Nature's cathartic is poured into the intestines and serves to keep them regular and active.

It is only by keeping the liver active that you can really overcome constipation and relieve the most serious forms of indigestion.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are, above all else, regulators of the liver. They quickly arouse the torpid, sluggish liver to healthful activity, ensure action of the bowels and proper working at the kidneys. Put this time-proven medicine to the test when you are feeling out-of-sorts from constipation or indigestion, when you have headaches or that feelings which tells of backache or the first sluggish action of the liver or kidneys. 35 cts. a box, at all druggists.

In nontechnical language. This combination of substances is sometimes presented in a way that every one can understand is one of the most commanding features of the Canadian Geographical Journal.

So many inaccurate and misleading statements have got aboard as to Ethiopia and its people that it is extremely satisfactory to find in the January number a thoughtful article by Professor Vivian Bridges, University of Toronto, correcting various misapprehensions about that ancient land. Dr. Mercer has paid many visits to Abyssinia, knows the people and their customs, and is a specialist in their history, language, religion and institutions. Therefore, Dr. Mercer disproves the idea that has been repeated so frequently this year, namely, that the Ethiopians belong to the Negro race and that the present conflict is one between the black and white races.

Other Canadian articles in the January number include one on the Canadian Rockies by Arthur Stringer and their manners and customs, and another on the economic and social conditions in facilitating travel in the North Country. Madge Macbeth, known as a writer of mystery and short story writer, is also developing a reputation as a discriminating traveller. In this number of the Journal she gives her impressions of the Southern Slavs and their home north-east of the Adriatic Sea.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied by Biggar and Cranwell by Financial Service.

Read Authier — This Company has a very large interest in two of the most promising properties in Quebec, Lamaque Gold Mines Sigma Gold Mines, the former under Noah's management and Bigmac controlled by Dome Mines. The asset value of the company's shares is unbelievable when the current market price.

Sullivan—With ore reserves estimated at over 1,000,000 tons of $13.50 ore, production is being stepped up from 100 to 140-150 tons a day, and recent developments hold much promise of a further substantial addition. In this event there would warrant a doubling of the present quarterly 15c rate. Principals of Siscoe. Sullivan has much promise of duplicating or surpassing the performance of Siscoe.

Pickle Crow—The main vein has been cut at the new 750-ft. level. The east face on the 700-ft. level is 7-4 ft. and the west face 8½ across 5 ft.

God's Lake — Reports December the biggest month's production in its history, with an average daily milling rate of 175 tons, which still heads running .345 oz.

Gillies Lake—The new mill is now in full operation. Tonnage is being worked up to the rated capacity of 100 tons daily and the first brick of bullion will be poured before the end of the month.

Buffalo Ankerite — According to a statement by the president, Solicitor, E. O. Kinkle, Buffalo anticipates earnings of 70 cents a share for 1936. Present milling rate is above 500 tons per day.

Paymaster — Under agreement dated January 15, 1936, the company has sold 100,000 shares at 50 cents per share and granted three options as follows: 100,000 at 50 cents per share to April 15, 1936; 100,000 at 60 cents to December 31; 100,000 at 75 cents to December 31 and 100,000 at $1.50 to July 1, 1937.

Red Lake Gold Shore — The March, April and May interest payments under the underwriting agreement dated June 24, 1935, have been taken up in full.

Wayside — Managing director Ritchie reports that showings continuing free gold have been exposed in a sub-level between the first and second levels and in an adit on the 150-ft. level.

Marbuan— Merger proposal with Buffalo Ankerite and Paymaster is favorable, but Marbuan to receive 1 Buffalo for 8 shares of Marbuan.

A substantial section of the Street continues to carry the low priced issues. Apparently the public feels that any decline in the level brought the depression can continue to survive and that it will be only a greater the chance for speculative profit.

Brewing Corporation preferred in October last sold at 38 a share. Since that time the issue has exactly doubled in price, the prevailing market being in the vicinity of 76. Brewing Corporation common, three months ago, was selling at $1.95 and is currently quoted in the $3-3½ range. The rise in the preferred appears to have solidstanced the bull position in connection with this company. It is interesting to point out that sales and earnings are continuing to show improvement in comparison with a year ago.

In connection with the strength in Industrial issues, it is reported in the Street that a constructive development is pending for this period, announcements of which is expected in the next day or two. The annual statement of the company will be made public early in March and it is a foregone conclusion that the results will reveal the highest per share earnings in the history of the company.

THE DRAMA

"A Prince There Was," a Brilliant Success at Belleville Opera House

It's Mack's Club

To devotees of amateur acting in the city the annual presentation of the T's Mack's Club players, regarded as the community's most representative drama group, is anticipated months much eagerness and last evening's "A Prince There Was" sustained the high standard of performance that the public have come to expect of those who take part in the Club's yearly offering. With a cast of leading Belleville talent, this engaging comedy drama which George M. Cohan made an successful on Broadway was a brilliant example of the splendid ability of acting for which this group has been noted.

"A Prince There Was" carries with it all the appeal of the Cinderella theme, a "prince" posing as a hard-working editor, a poor little girl with a love of fairy tales and a host of others all in disguise. But the story has many modern twists, so many unique and accepted situations that any one but the most astute fairy godmother would feel discouraged by the way in which matters get out of hand and take their own course.

The characters simply will not be stereotyped. Traditional they fail and instead of being properly impressed with the general air of mystery that surrounds "princes," associates even turn to amateur detecting. But we shall not spoil the prescribed manner.

It all begins with Charles Marlowe's effort to liberate himself in something besides drinking to forget the tragedy of the death of his wife and child. He is roused from the lethargy and boredom that has marked the four intervening years by the unexpected visit of a little girl who is the granddaughter of his editor-friend. He is intrigued by her description of the people at her foster mother's boarding house, her desire to see a prince, followed by her devotion to her paternal friend who seems to be a struggling young authoress in need of help. To the despair of his valet and the perplexity of his friend he becomes a boarder at the very lowest rate established and he finds that life offers much for those who are willing to look for adventure.

With his arrival in the boarding house the action of the play takes impetus and there begins the series of misunderstandings which make the entertainment so full of fun. Dawson Boyd as this rich young man who inspires the awe of the boarders and of the boarding place gave a splendid performance, bringing just the right touch of sympathy that is wholly convincing. He falls in love with the beautiful "princess" and in spite of the struggling authoress who is really a successful writer of stories. This actress merits much praise for her smooth, distinguished performance. Miss Vermilyea's soft, musical voice is always a delight and her acting is restrained and understanding.

As Martin's valet, Mr. Douglas Price made a good foil for the master who and was never out of character. Mr. Jack Darlington as the landlord presented quite a distinct impression with his natural manner, easy stage presence and fine speaking voice. Miss Nellie Marshall as Cousin Beverly Brown, the authoress who is pounding house drudge, reminded us of Mary Pickford and her vivid characterization of a similar character in the film success bearing only her name. OSHAWANS STAGE ENTERTAINMENT BEFORE MASONS

Moira Chapter Welcomes Pentalpha Chapter Companions

MOTOR INDUSTRY

Pentalpha Chapter, Royal Arch Masons of Oshawa, who are members of the office and plant staffs of the General Motors Corporation of Canada, came to Belleville last night to the number of about fifty. There were guests of Moira Chapter No. 7, Royal Arch Masons at the Masonic Temple and brought all the entertainment of the night. In chapter room their degree team put on the work and at set in the dining hall they also entertained with song, magic, and with the first showing of a film depicting life in Canada's major industry, the General Motors of Canada, and in the plants in various cities scattered from the maritime coast out of the corporation.

The visiting Oshawans attracted no only many companions of the local chapters but also representatives of other chapters in Prince Edward area.

Worshipful Companion A. Wilson of Pentalpha Chapter headed the degree team and at the banquet Companion Chapman as the First Principal of Moira Chapter Ex. Comp. H. E. Thompson presided over to him the office while the visitors put on the program.

Artists Entertain

W. G. Morrow gave a trendy miniature demonstration of magic and performed numerous card tricks which were mystories before the company. F. J. Prosser sang a number of rollicking ballads with humorous effect and Mr. Morrow made them much enjoyed and C. Tom Hall sang in several songs. Matthew Guldburn acted as accompanist and pianist of the evening and the progress of the projectionist operating the film of General Motors.

During the greeting Ex. Comp. Harold Boyce displayed the insignia of the candidate" which was honored.

In the chapter room a short First Principal's address and Ex. Companion Barber on the completion of his year of office.

First Showing of Film

The showing of the General Motors plant at Oshawa and of the work of the companies supplying parts for the assembly of cars in that which the Belleville companions were privileged to see for the first showing anywhere in Canada. A carefully planned and most modern study filled one with the sense of the vastness of modern enterprise and of the precision with which the manufacture of cars and the assembling of parts from 1300 factories in various parts of the country is conducted.

How research and science are stimulated by the industry was indicated by the statement that there are 1,000 of sizes in a car. Not one of these can be substituted for another and that is why they are put means a difference of mechanical research.

In 1934 there were over 70,000 persons in Canada who owned their own homes and the building of automobiles, he remarked, as compared with 1933 was 1300 per cent. years ago.

The industry, he said, was the last to go into the depression and the first to come out; it is leading the way to the end depression.

New Business Ethics

"The automotive industry has given us ethics," he noted pointing to the motto inscribed on the front of the principle which used to be followed seemed to be "Caveat Emptor" Let the buyer beware. It is gone in the main because of the unwritten law of business which has been stimulated by the motor industry—that what you have bought and sold is not satisfactorily bought and sold unless it contains something which has been bought and sold." Today there is a sense of responsibility in selling."

Col. Chappell referred to the circumstances of manufacturing cars as men glory in building something worth while. Progress has to be considered. With the times and man must not try to beat with his hands against the juggernauts of progress.

Following entertainment came to a close with the junior warden's toast and the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

The Oshawa party returned home after midnight by bus which had been chartered for the trip.

"Redmen" Down Peterboro Leading from Barrier to Wire In Fast and Exciting Game

Don Morton Between Sticks Gives Clever Display

BARRIAGE SCORES 4

Held Unto Early Lead by Smooth System of Defence

Gaining full revenge for their lacrosse defeat by the Peterboro' one week previous the Belleville "Redmen" played hard-to-get Monday night to defeat the Petes by the score of 5 to 3 at the Belleville arena last night. Forging to the front early in the initial frame the Thomas-Fargo aggregation always kept the key of the game down at the Petes' end by belated gauging attacks, the locals revealed to a defensive game and forced the visitors to carry the play. Their smooth system as the "Redmen" set up a letter-perfect defense and calmly protected their advantage throughout.

Orchids were the order of the night for goalie Don Morton who turned in a brilliant effort in the Belleville nets. Literally hooting off the powerful shellfire packs, as the Petes staged five men ganging attacks behind the second defence pair, centre Third period. Morton was given ample support by Defencemen Earl McDonald and Harry Ingram, his defencemen, with the latter being the individual star of the Belleville attacks that proved troublesome. The slighting forward line of "Cy" Partridge, Carl and Pete Morgan carried oodles of speed and was responsible for the shooting of the "Redmen" forwards, with Barriage being the leading marksman of the night as he banged four counters, two of which were on solo efforts early in the game. "Speedy" St. Louis stood out as the best of the local aforemades although Harry Ingram, McGrath and McGrobe proved valuable cogs in the Belleville defensive machine. When combination plays were needed the "Redmen" displayed plenty of class as they showed some skoot out in their defensive zone, so they continually forced the Petes to carry the play and then thwarted their efforts before they could get clear of their own Belleville ends. Collectively the Thomas men played a smooth defensive game and forced the Petes to constantly play into their hands. Consteady playing of Harry Ingram, especially as the Petes staged five man attacks, and the excellent work of Morton, who individually starred in the game, were the keys with Barriage's three brilliant goals.

Three Goalies Work

Monday night Wright of the Petes threw caution to the winds after the initial frame as he repeatedly tried to overcome the locals' advantage with repeated gangattacks, but the fine work of Morton, and the close checking of the "Redmen" kept the Peterboro' net at the safe mark. The Petes possessed plenty of speed and ability but lost out on their shooting was off and when they did manage to locate the net, Don Morton stood between them and desired victory with his miraculous saves. Jerky, ragged forward play was the Petes, literally worked himself into exhaustion as he constantly led the Petes in the attack. The Peterboro' line of Ellis flanked by Roy Connell and Red Geddes, who heralded important crew, displayed classy skating ability, but were marked down for their lack of the powerful stand-off by the locals. Calladine was the defensive mainstay for their team's cause with Calladine acting as the spoil-sport in combined attacks that went for naught, except once. Calladine and McGee were by two assistant coaches for the Petes, although on numerous occasions the Petes' bench coaches missed golden opportunities to score in their haste to beat Morton. The close checking of the locals improved the undoing of the highly-touted Petes despite their concerted efforts in the last half. Fifteen penalties in all were meted out by Referee Joe Smith, Belleville's popular pro star and Peterboro six. The game was a spirited contest with feelings and sticks being carried high throughout and frequent sounds of applause to nearly 900 fans who stamped their approval on Belleville's 1936 O.H.A. entry.

The Play.

Play opened at a classy pace with both teams travelling fast. Geddes and Watt raced to bid Morton for the first shot on net but Morton and Pete Morgan retaliating. Ingram and McDonald broke down a stiff barrage of body checks that forced the Petes to retire without getting from outside the Belleville defence early in the initial frame.

Feelings ran high when Ingram and his had been handed out before Ingram broke loose, carried the puck perfectly to the goal-mouth, passed to Pete Morgan, and his latter making sure of the first goal of the season as he flipped the rubber past Foley to flash the red light. With McGuire off the Petes staged a five man ganging attack that Belleville warded off and H. Morgan later carried the puck behind the net, passed out to perfect combination play to Barriage in front of the Petes' net, with Barriage rifling home counter number two for Belleville. A minute later Villeriall coasted down centre ice, drew the Belleville defence to the right and slipped a pass over to Bill Calladine who skated in on the unprotected Morton to score. Shortly later, and on the penalties of Goodman combination of the bright, Ingram carried the puck to the Petes' defence, passed to Pete Morgan, who in turn slipped the rubber over to "Cy" Partridge, who drew Foley out of position nicely as he shot and scored making the count 3 to 1 in favor of Belleville as the first period ended.

Second Period.

The second period commenced with Pete Morgan decorating the penalty box and the Petes peppered five men forward. "Cy" Partridge cagily poked the rubber from the centre zone and out-hooting the entire Peterboro squad, raced in on Goaltender Foley, parted him out of position and flashed the red light at exactly 2 minutes 30 seconds past the mark in this point and numerous penalties were handed out. The Petes continued to bombard the Belleville defence, but without effort and no parting was in sight when at the last minute of play in the second canto Harry Ingram carried out from the corner and McGee poked the puck in behind Morton. Harry Morgan broke away from the over Foley's head when he had no trouble in finding the net for the third Belleville counter.

Third Period.

Again in the last period the Petes moved five to the forward line and again Barriage staged his second brilliant solo effort to flash the red light. Team and sally in on Foley from close and cashed the game. Ellis was close on Barriage's heels and Morton stopped a very hot shot to crack two ribs and dislocate his shoulder. Ingram was banished and attended to by Dr. Van Blaskom. The final ball saw the Petes pressing without effect and Belleville won the day 5 to 2.

The stay-at-homes missed a rousing O.H.A. hockey match at the Belleville Arena last night. The local "Redmen" gathered full revenge for their defeat handed to them last week by the Petes when the Reds 5 to 3 and despite arguments to the contrary, the locals surely deserved the honors they enjoy today, simply because they outplayed, outskated the Petes to play the brand of hockey they wanted them to and in so doing emerged winners. It was in excellent condition with the result that two periods of real hang-up hockey was witnessed, with the "Redmen" playing purely a defensive game in the last canto to protect their advantage. Goalie Don Morton picked out enough rubber from in front of the Belleville net to manufacture tires for a dozen of the largest transport jobs on the highways, while the body-checking of Earl McDonald and Harry Ingram brought respect in that direction from the speedy Petes early on in the game. Harry and Earl surely smeared 'em plenty. Of course what Petes has got the real thrill from were the two solo efforts of "Cy" Barriage, from all of which he collected all scores to bag four sweet counters.

Manager Eddie Wright trotted out a gang of classy speed skaters when he selected his team but with their heralded scoring men, Cowert, Geddes and Calladine were rendered to the proverbial nothing by the local forwards, the Belleville defence and Morton in the nets. The result was the Petes, as did Eddie Wright, "Red" Dailey and Conn Smythe, lord of the Maple Leafs, before them, were bowled over by the Belleville "Redmen" and Manager Eddie Wright failed to click with his Petes. Wright's men were checked to a standstill by the local forwards, the Belleville defence and Morton in the nets and as the result was the Petes, as did "Red" Dailey before them, "Red" Geddes must have been thinking to that new song hit, "The Music Goes 'Round and Around" as the Petes merely skated around and around the Belleville defence all night with little avail. Key Cowert also tried in vain to score against the Belleville mainstay, but he failed to manufacture them and kept in tow, while Frankie Foley, Peterboro's baseball fame, led the Petes with Calladine being the nearest approach to be accounted for as the Petes were neutralized. Try as they might, and the Petes surely staged three ganging acts than we have ever seen in one game, they simply could not penetrate the sturdy Belleville defense. Manager Eddie Wright tried all the tricks in the hockey bible, but without success as it is safe to say that he will not have to step out and trim the Oshawa crew if they expect to repeat the win handed the Peterboro O.H.A. race in the "A" series in 1935.

"Duke" Smith's Belleville Yacht Club team opened the Bay of Quinte League night at the Arena over the Picton aggregation in Picton last night. From all reports the game was a spirited affair as one fight and one injury resulted in the Ehlers and Owens of Picton tangled in a donnybrook while Mase Rigby received a cut lip from the stick of Hudgins, Picton defenceman. The "sailors" won 4 to 3 after a fast game throughout and attracted a goodly number of Prince Edward residents.

Getting back to the intermediate O.H.A. tilt, we have been by Belleville relative to the fact that Peterboro' team, but they did not overshadow Eddie Thomas' charges in that line last night, as the Morgan boys, St. Louis and McGuire showed up as much good as the visitors, while the local defence looked much better than the Petes' near strangers from achieving his 32rd, and quickest, counter of the season.

The victim was strapping Charles Retzlaff from the North Dakota wheat country. Retzlaff lasted one minute and 25 seconds of the first round before going down and out under the Detroit Negro's stunning punches last night in the Chicago stadium. A crowd of 16,000 saw Retzlaff keep his promise to try to last a night or longer before he completely outclassed.

Joe Louis looks into a year as Retzlaff strode out and made the first offensive gesture, a straight left hook that Louis gave packy exchanges with his junior group. Ross Morton Jones and Prince Edward County League, along with Bert Johnston, Mc-Arthur-Rockwell-Belleville and others will make their debut before the local fans when Manager Harry M's senior game, the players seem to be able to play a match before packed houses and they would be as give the kids a break and keep away from the rink one Monday night when they pay off the debt incurred when Aubrey Lett's Gananoque juniors.

In a regular scheduled Owl League game at the Arena last night, the Herchimer Avenue gang defeated Corbyn Kilner's Queen Lunch aggregation by the score of 6 to 3. The game was played after the O.H.A. tilt.

Freddie Lindstrom, major league player who spent a couple of days in this sparo recently, in the autumn of 1932 and 1933 in the wilds of North Hastings, was picked by the Brooklyn Dodgers recently. Freddie has had a varied baseball career in the "big time" having played with the Giants, Pirates, Cubs and now the Dodgers. Incidentally Freddie likes Canada and especially the fishing in and around Toronto.

Secretary Charlie Jeffs of the Belleville Yacht Club informs us that Belleville and Picton basketeers and wrestlers have been taken over by the "sailors" and will be put under the colors of the B. Managers of local juvenile, bantam and midget hockey teams should bear in mind Monday night's O.H.A. league meeting at the "Y" when schedules will be drawn up promptly at the close of the meeting, at which all entries will have to be submitted.

LOUIS POLISHES RETZLAFF OFF IN LESS THAN ROUND

In One Minute And 25 Seconds The Fight is Over

Chicago, Jan. 18 (AP) — They found a fighter game enough to slug with Joe Louis but not anywhere near good enough to keep the champion's fists away from achieving his 32rd, and quickest, knockout triumph.

"SAILORS" WIN AT PICTON 6-4

Mase Rigby Cut on Lip And First Fight Features Pastime

In a fast-skating, thrilling hockey game the Belleville Yacht Club sailors defeated the Quinte League aggregation of Picton by a score of 6 to 4 in favor of the Picton boys in the last night's evening. The game was played on lightning fast ice and was a speedy affair throughout. The local "Sailors" under the management of "Duke" Smith showed a lot of finish and carried sufficient speed to down the Picton boys who were always forced to play a spirited affair with fistic encounters entering into the contest from time to time to keep things down.

Mase Rigby, local defenceman, was struck in the face by a hockey stick in the hands of Ramie Hudgins, Picton defenceman, with sufficient force to cut Rigby's lip and necessitate the attention of a physician and stitches to close the wound. Jimmie Ehler and Owens of Picton drew major penalties for fighting and general bedlam ensued for a short time, much to the satisfaction of a large Picton audience.

The Yacht Club "sailors" led the scoring from start to finish to the win as J. Reuben Pepper opened the scoring early in the initial frame. Pepper banged two of Belleville's goals with Howie, Doran, Fred McGuire and Gil. Bonisteel collecting the other counters. Wright, Owens, Boyle and Hudgins scored for the homesters. Each team drew seven penalties, Sergent and Pepper getting two each with Ehler and Owens getting one each.

HOCKEY SLOGLIGHTS

Who was the sulging star of the N.H.L. Stanley Cup playoff games last year? Well, let matter who is on top, according to the figure that are sold not to lie, Toronto fans will be glad that handsome Earl Robinson of the pestiferous Maroons was not in the league.

This Montreal-born puck-chaser, who caused during the Maroons' night boards, capped all his previous efforts by the display he turned in after his fellow players hung in the balance last season. He showed that he knows how to check, along with the rest of Gorman's crew and in front of the nets there isn't a much more polished performer than Robinson.

Until 1933 Earl alternated between Montreal and Windsor, the Bulldogs of the border town having virtual recollection of his fine work in the International League. He turned pro in Kitchener, Ont., finally improving a high school sensation in Montreal Shamrocks, Montreal Canadian-American League in scoring, he stepped up to the International and duplicated his performance. Montreal decided it was time to bring him to the home stadium.

In addition to hockey, Robinson is a smart golfer and a rifle shot of no mean ability. He is 5 feet 10 and weighs about 160 pounds. This year he is made to stash, but around the Notre Dame de Grace area of Montreal they still do their hockey swearing by the popular Robbie.

GANANOQUE JRS. HERE ON MONDAY

Local Team Will be Considerably Strengthened For Contest

Advancing their schedule slightly owing to counter attractions the speedy juvenile hockey team will appear at the Belleville Arena versus the junior Belleville team on next Monday night in a regular O.H.A. fixture. The change of 24 hours although necessitated by the Belleville Manager Eddie Thomas, who seems to be pushing for an early finish for reward of the date, as Monday always proved a good hockey night in Belleville.

It will be the local juniors' initial appearance on the home ice surface and the home crowd and should see a fast, thrilling contest between the 1936 edition of the local juniors. Manager Eddie Thomas has gone to considerable expense to whip together a winning junior combination and while the juniors have been practicing at the arena with regularity in preparation for their home stand, Manager Thomas has been seeking the initial contest of the season in Gananoque. He seems to have a winning combination that should give the locals honors with ease.

Gananoque can always be depended upon to drop over a fast skating hockey team when they are on their whistle sounds and Monday night should be no exception to the rule. For action and thrills there is no sport in comparison with junior O. H. A. hockey and the players give their best ability for the entire sixty minutes. Come out and see for defensive tactics. Manager Thomas has a good team in Belleville this season and all that remains to have a fine season prolific from all angles is to swell the crowds and cheer the "Redmen" on to greater heights.

With a few exceptions the junior "Redmen" will line up as follows: Goal, Hinton or Carson; defence, Kolesh and St. Denis; centre, Johnson; wings, Tompkins and Howie; subs, Storms, Pepper, Burley, Phillips and others.

Dale Plays The Game

CHAPTER 2.

DALE DECIDES

The blackness of the little alley seemed to echo with the Miserere of Phil's words. The girl's lips were quivering but she managed a shaky laugh.

"Oh.....so that's it! You're giving me up for Lil Delorme!"

"Now, Dale—what's the use of getting dramatic about it?" came the young fellow's sulky tones. "Maybe I put it a little bit strong!.....I'm really not through with you, you know that!"

He reached for her dimly seen figure, but she stepped away and warded him off with outstretched hands.

"No. You didn't put it too strong, I guess.....I guess you have to make things strong to a fool like me.....

"Oh, Dale—" he protested impatiently. "Please try and be sensible about this. Can't you see that Delorme can give me the edge if I hang in with her? Can't help it if she falls for me?" The girl could imagine the shrug which accompanied this. "You know I don't care about her, I love you, Dale, but if I marry you I'll be penniless so far as she's concerned, and there would be an end of everything I've worked so hard for. But Dale—sweetheart—" his voice took on its old warm compelling tone, "you know I love you..... only you....."

His gist aside her warding arms and held her close, and helpless against him.

"I love your eyes and your hair and the lovely silky skin of you, Dale—"

The words came smothered against her own lips.

"Phil—no! No!" She strained away, frightened at his intensity.

"Suppose I support you? I married Delorme, Dale—" came his intent voice, "that needn't end things for us, Dale! My scenes will be your success. I'll be able to give you things you should have—pretty things, Dale—and no one will be any the wiser. Why, I couldn't live without you, darling—"

She was struggling, crying with shame and anger. "I—how can you! How can you, Phil!" She was trying desperately to turn her face from his crushing kisses when the stage door was flung open a second time and the tall figure of Delorme boomed down upon them.

"For the love of Pete, Phil, make it snappy! Delorme's wild-eyed—"

She stopped in amazement as her eyes fell on their amorous figures. The man stepped and the girl took advantage of his momentary lack of wit to slip out of his arms and shrink against the wall to stand there panting and watchful.

The young fellow's face darkened with a scowl. "Delorme," he bawled. "Dale— Oh damn!" He wheeled and bolted up the steps, brushing the other woman unceremoniously aside as he went into the theatre.

"The newcomer at the girl's flushed and tear-stained face with frank curiosity.

"What were you and Phil staging—the world's best prize fight?" she asked.

The girl lowered her head and evaded the other's eyes as she came up the steps.

"Not now, Lil..... please. I—I want to be alone." She went hastily by into the dressing room.

It is had been warm outside it was stifling in here. The fierce heat had drawn out the perfume on the nine hooks' walls. In the unshaded electric glare it gleamed like fat tears. Dale paused before the disorderly wooden shelf which held her cosmetics.

It was a tragic white-faced slip of a girl who looked back at her from the depths of the cheap mirror. Lucky she had no more stage appearances tonight! Her tears had streaked the mascarro from her lashes. Her lip rouge had smeared and smeared under Phil's kisses. Her hair was plastered about her wet forehead and neck in yellow ringlets with the heat. Her chiffon dress was limp, pasted damply to her slim body.

The last few minutes had exhausted her emotions so that now she acted automatically. She picked up a smeared rag and began to wipe off her make-up. She pulled the limp chiffon over her head and slipped into her satin and lace negligee which she plucked from the back of a chair.

Juve-bugs swarmed about the blazing electric light—loathsome things which hit the hot bulb with regular little plops and dropped to the sandy floor, some wings moved about among her toilet articles.

One had fallen into the can of grease paint. Fascinated with horror Dale watched it. Something horrible in the frantic efforts to drag its long red body free from the sticky mess. Something dreadfully personal—

"Like me!" whispered the girl to herself.

Dale Evans frantically trying to free herself from the grease paint of cheap shows and night clubs. Dale Evans—uciously struggling—losing her wings—held fast by her station environment.

Ugh! she shrank from it. Like tiptoed away from her teeth in disgust she fished the unfortunate insect out of paste with a nail file and flicked it to the floor.

"Get out and keep out, you kind!" she cried.

Dale talking to Dale!

Crossing to a battered theatrical trunk she flung it open and began packing the make-up articles and the sleazy satin and cottony-velvet costumes which hung carelessly from the corner of the mirrow.

The salem curtain in the doorway jingled back on its brass rings. Lil came into the room. Her broad flushed face was very solemn, her eyes were worried as she crossed to the girl who kneeled by her head.

"What are you doing, Dale?"

"Packing, Lil." Dale answered softly. "I'm leaving the show tonight.

"Lil sighed until her corsets creaked.

The girl's voice came smothered form the depths of the trunk.

"Oh, don't! Don't worry for me, Lil!" she said with a lightness which did not deceive the other. "I'm much better to find out what a man is before you marry him than after."

Then her feeble pretence broke and Lil saw bright drops falling into the trunk. "And Phil—Oh, Lil..... I thought Phil was—mine! I thought Phil would stand by me no matter what happened. Just Phil and me—against the world....."

Dale drew a long, shaking breath. "Oh well.....I'm going to do what he said. I'm—my head and look out for Dale Evans!"

Lil De Vos's broad face was scarlet and her eyes—like blue marbles in that florlimess—flashed. An old temper, Lil De Vos, one who had juggled a spear in every burlesque circus from California to Maine. Her heavy body on lavishly curved legs spoke of a day when the slim type of Dale Evans was never seen on the stage. But Lil's body was big, and Lil's heart. She crossed to the kneeling girl and pelted her up bodily into her arms.

"Poor little kid," she crooned patting Dale's back. "I see it coming the day you joined our show. Delorme's a cat. And Phil Clifford is crazy—like a fox! He's one for Phil Clifford and God help the rest of us. There—there—baby, don't cry. Don't cry, honey—" this in spite of the fact that sympathetic tears were coursing down her own broad cheeks. Then, between her teeth, "Oh, I could wring his handsome head off his neck—the selfish beast!"

CHAPTER 3.

THE END OF A DREAM

Dale drew gently away from Lil's big warm embrace.

"Let me go, Lil," she said wearily. "I have to pack—"

"But Dale, why don't you stick till the show gets back to "Frisco?" Dale shook her head. "No. I'm through with shows. I've been sick of it for a long time. I just stuck because of Phil. I'll never make a good actress. And I'm sick of the pretence of it all. I was dancing on the stage before I could talk plain. I was working in a night club at the age other girls were going to high schools. I'm sick of one night stands and rehearsals in a draughty theatre. I'm through and I told Davis so tonight."

"But, honey—what you going to do?"

Dale bent wearily over her trunk. "I'm going to look for a job."

"Here? This town?" There was something comic in Lil's wholehearted dismay.

Dale shrugged and slammed the trunk lid. "Why not here as well as any other place?" She looked up and smiled wryly into the other's face. "Stop being so sorry for me, Lil. I'm not that sorry for myself. If I was such a fool that I fell in love with Phil Clifford and believed his pretty lies—well, that comes from the beading of just Too Bad! I thought life had taught me to look after myself. I guess I needed a knock on the head to remind me so hard. But I'll bet that I'll never be caught off my guard again!" So—Dale: blandly ignorant of the drama that the future held for her.

"Now, honey—you'll think different when you've cooled off," said the old trouper soothingly. "You'll stay for the show?"

But Lil De Vos was seeing a Dale Evans she had never before known. Until little but her head and made up. Half an hour later she took her hand bag and hat and stepped out of the stage door into the warm darkness of Coit City. She had refused to wait for Lil to change and walk with her to the room they shared at the Coit City House. She was tired of arguments. Dale was tired. She did not want to explain to the curious caste of the Primrose Bride.....she did not want to see the malicious triumph on Lil Delorme's face.

It was like a dream to be walking in the street alone like this, a strange lonely ache at her heart. Gone was the cynical armor she had worn before Lil. Dale was all smiling girl now. In all her worldbattling young life, Phil Clifford alone had stirred the dreams which slept in Dale's heart. She had met him in a theatrical boarding house, a handsome, ambitious young fellow who acted small parts in a stock company. Dale was dancing in a night club. For a time the gay little barque of their youth and love had ridden high before the storm of poverty and ill-luck. When work was scarce for Phil, Dale took him on as her dancing partner. Happy reckless days they were then Dale and Phil were rich in everything but money. There were cheap little suppers after the show. Whoever had the money paid. There were ambitious dreams confessed as they strolled home together through the fog. There was a night when Phil held Dale in his arms and kissed her sweet eager lips. Dale would have married him the next day and kept on fighting gallantly by his side. But the man was made of different stuff. He liked his ambitions, had Phil Clifford. He loved Dale of course, he told himself easily, but no third-rate little dancer was going to spoil Phil Clifford's chances. So they drifted along—Dale blissfully ignorant—Phil his weather eye out for his main chance. And that chance proved to be Lila Delorme. The former stage favorite was taking a comedy on the road and the Delorme temper was not improved by the time she dropped into the cafe where he danced with Dale. The handsome boy was offered a part in his operation last Saturday when he had guarded her that it had grown to be difficult for Zora to think of him injuring her. But as she looked into his little eyes now, their expression brought her to a sudden halt.

Zora Drinov's strength was slowly returning. Today she had taken a few steps out into the sunlit clearing. The elephant regarded her out of his little eyes. She no longer feared him as she no longer feared the strange white man who had befriended her.

The girl approached the great bull. He had been so docile all the days that he had guarded her that it had grown to be difficult for Zora to think of him injuring her. But as she looked into his little eyes now, their expression brought her to a sudden halt.

20 MONTHS' LOSS SET AT $1,767.51

Witness Called on Behalf of Constable, Faints on Stand

Toronto, Jan. 17 (CP)—In the second preceding trials of six Toronto policemen in 1932 and 1933 in connection with various burglaries, a local branch manager of Canadian Shoe Stores Ltd. reported loss of $1,767.51. Another witness for the Royal Commission inquiring into police affairs was being sworn.

Formal stock shortages for the period might approximate 1000, R. S. Gillham of Gillham, Fowler, Secretary-Treasurer, told Judge J. J. Coughlin and Dana C. Bell, the Commissioners.

An inventory of that store five months later showed a shortage of only $2.84, witness said. Representatives' inventory reports for other stores were quoted and totaled from two or three dollars to $99 a year with occasional "overages" interposed.

The store manager set a watch-man on the premises on his own initiative, said Mr. Gillham, and Constable Robert Rimmonds, later convicted, was found in his store the night of March 30, 1932.

W. A. Trusler, called on behalf of Constable Michael O'Shea, one of 20 named in an alleged theft ring, was asked about conflicts in his testimony regarding dates he lived at O'Shea's house.

He suddenly swayed and fell down the steps from the witness stand. The inquiry was adjourned for 15 minutes, but Trusler was not sufficiently recovered to resume testimony but had regained consciousness and appeared to be recovering.

I had worn my faithful old blue crepe for the last time. It was shabby, run-down and about four years behind the styles. I needed a new dress, a nice one.

But it would have been selfish to ask John for the money. So instead of skimping on my household budget, I created my "new dress" fund by . . .

. . . reading and shopping the advertised values in the Ontario Intelligencer. The saving I made buying this way, getting high quality at lower prices, soon bought that new dress . . .

. . . and by keeping my ad-shopping habits, I know I'll be able to buy others as I need them. John says he has me and the ads to thank!

THE WEATHER
Mostly fair and cold today and Tuesday; scattered snowflurries.

KING'S STRENGTH DIMINISHING SAYS BULLETIN

2 Drivers in Truck Killed in Crash with Train at Cemetery Crossing

Oxygen is Administered Second Time in Illness; General Slowing-up Seen

Visit of Members of Royal Family is Kept Very Short

EARLY REPORT GOOD

Townspeople Crowd Gates of King's Residence to Read Bulletin

Sandringham, Jan. 20 (CP)—Oxygen was administered to the sinking King George V today and high physicians announced the strength was "diminishing".

A person in close touch with court circles described the King's slow weakening as "a general slowing up of the bodily machine".

This is at least the second time oxygen is known to have been given the King since Friday.

Every effort was being made to conserve the Monarch's strength. Even the visits of Queen Mary and other members of the family to his bedside have been kept as short as possible.

Physicians remained at the King's bedside throughout the afternoon.

The Royal Sign of Sewage.

The 5:30 p.m. bulletin was the first since Saturday afternoon to report that the King had gained strength.

The announcement was quickly posted on the "Jubilee gate" at Sandringham House.

Many officials returning to their homes from work, clustered tightly to read the words.

The news soon spread into the village of Dersingham, about two kilometres from Sandringham, where the bituminous skirts of the hill, to gather at the gates of the King's residence to wait further information.

Sandringham, Jan. 20 (CP) — A physician's bulletin announced at 5:30 p.m. today that the strength of King George was "diminishing".

The bulletin, signed by three physicians, stated:

"The condition of the King shows diminishing strength."

The affairs of monarchy already had been taken over by a councellors of state appointed with the full knowledge of the King.

Bulletin Disquieting

The disquieting bulletin followed a more hopeful outlook which had been held throughout the day in the cause of Indeed the three previous bedside reports that the monarch's condition was unchanged and that he apparently was maintaining his strength.

The physicians' bulletin was signed by Sir Frederick J. Williams, Sir Stanley Hewett, personal physicians to His Majesty, and Lord Dawson of Penn, physician in ordinary.

It was considered the most serious issued since Friday night's statement which first revealed that the King was in a critical condition with a weakening heart.

Counsellors of State.

The official statement of the names of the counsellors of state who will fill the royal duties during the King's illness was announced from the Privy Council offices in London as follows:

"His Majesty the King, at a council held in Sandringham this morning, appointed counsellors of state.

"Those so appointed are: Her Majesty the Queen, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of York, H.R.H. the Duke of Gloucester, and H.R.H. the Duke of Kent.

"There were present at the council the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President of the Council, Lord Dawson of Penn, Lord Wigram, and the Home Secretary.

"Mr. Maurice Hankey, in attendance as Clerk of the Council."

The royal perogatives thus all remain within the hands of the members of the Royal Family.

The appointment of the council departed from the procedure of two previous instances when members of the cabinet had been named to together with the Queen and others of the King's family.

London, Jan. 20 (CP)—The Duke of Gloucester, third son of the King, remained at Buckingham Palace today and was told his sore throat has not sufficiently improved to permit a journey to Sandringham.

Paris, Jan. 20 (CP)—Queen Hi concerned over the illness of King George today instructed Panteho Hadji-Mischeff, Bulgarian Minister at London, to keep him informed of the British Monarch's condition.

Addis Ababa, Jan. 20 (CP)—Emperor Haile Selassie today instructed his government to place the northern army headquarters at Desaye to keep him constantly informed of the condition of King George.

Interest in the British Monarch's illness was high because Britain is regarded here as one of the powers most friendly to Ethiopia in the conflict with Italy.

Canada Sends Message.

Ottawa, Jan. 20.—The Secretary to Baron Tweedsmuir to-day made public the text of a personal cable sent by the Governor-General to King George, expressing hope for His Majesty's speedy recovery and a reply from Queen Mary.

The Governor-General's message sent at 2 p.m. yesterday:

"The King, Sandringham:

"We are all deeply concerned at the news of Your Majesty's illness and sincerely wish Your Majesty a speedy recovery. (Signed) Tweedsmuir."

The reply sent from Sandringham at 12:45 p.m. today (7:45 a.m. E.S.T.):

"Governor General of Canada: For I am very grateful to you for your kind message and for the good wishes you send from Canada. (Signed) Mary R."

His Majesty Appoints Council of State in His Stead

CROWDS WAIT NEWS

Monarch Enjoys Several Hours of Peaceful Sleep

Sandringham, Jan. 20—(CP and AP Cable)—King George V, propped up in bed, signed a document today appointing Counsellors of State to assume many of the Royal duties during His Majesty's grave illness.

The King's advisers had come to Sandringham House to consider appointing Counsellors of State almost as soon as the news of the King's serious illness was announced. His Majesty had passed a quiet, restful night.

With the sovereign entering an apparently decisive stage of his illness, the following bulletin was issued at 9.45 a.m. (4:45 a.m. E.S.T.) said:

Restful Night

"The King had had a more restful night. There is no substantial change to record in His Majesty's condition."

It was learned authoritatively he slept several hours during the night and despite a wave heart weakness arising from a sudden, severe cold and bronchial catarrh, he suffered no pain.

Medical authorities looking for a possible crisis tonight expected him a warmer weather today to assist in clearing up the catarrhal condition.

A cold rain set in during the morning, crying rapidly at sleet and covering the roads around Sandringham House with a sheet of ice.

J. J. FAULKNER'S ARREST SOUGHT REPORT STATES

New Flurry of Interest in Hauptmann Case Evident

LEGISLATURE MEETS

Attorney Wilentz Leaves For South But Will be Back Soon

BY DALE HARRISON
Associated Press Staff Writer.

Trenton, N.J., Jan. 20 (AP)—If the Lindbergh kidnap case is to become a political football, there will be opportunity tonight for the kickoff.

The legislature, Republican-controlled but possessed of a lively Democratic minority, meets for the first time since Governor Harold G. Hoffman granted Bruno Richard Hauptmann a 30-day reprieve, and for the first time since an "Unpeach Hoffman" demand was published in Trenton newspapers.

A legislative move against the Governor, to remove him from his formal duty of impeachment proceedings, to reconsider a demand by the governor for investigation of the course of other state authorities.

In the days of Hauptmann's regular from the electric chair to second, another figure in the case made his way to the state. First Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, with his attorney, Col. Henry Breckinridge, and John Condon, Lindbergh's ransom intermediary, left on a South American trip.

Today Attorney General David T. Wilentz, Hauptmann's chief prosecutor, remained prepared for his annual trip to Florida, but the chief to return before the reprieve expires.

Interested in Interview

The Governor was reported to be interested in Morris Reiner, one of the Intermediaries drafted by Col. Lindbergh early in the case. Reiner has believed at the time to have valuable contacts in the underworld.

The Governor wants to know if Reiner or any other outsiders had been paid money from the original ransom note with his identifying number before the subsequent notes were received.

The State Police contend the note should always in their possession. Counsel for Hauptmann argued otherwise in Federal Court in Trenton last week.

There was a flurry of new interest in "J. J. Faulkner," with reports of his identity had been established and his arrest sought.

The Governor has been advised, however, that Faulkner, a New York penman, who says Hauptmann forged his name, has told police he notes that "J. J. Faulkner" the letter-writer and "J. J. Faulkner" who signed the deposit slip at the New York Federal Reserve Bank on April 2, 1932, when Lindbergh was turned in are not the same person.

From prosecution sources came indication they regard the testimony of the Faulkner letter to the Governor was an imitator of a signature.

Faulkner, who lives in Seattle, acted at the South Amboy home of Governor Hoffman's friend, Colonel by Police Chief David W. Quinlan.

SETTLE WAR ONLY ON ITALIAN LINES

This Announcement Made By Italian Sources Today

Geneva, Jan. 20 (AP) — Italian sources announced categorically today the Italo-Ethiopian conflict could be settled only along Italian lines as the League of Nations Council opened its 90th session.

Baron Aloisi, Premier Mussolini's Geneva representative, was absent from the last special session, occupied his chair at the opening of today's session.

Authoritative Italian sources, however, said they had no peace proposals themselves and knew of none formed by others to settle the East African conflict in any way but that already undertaken by Italy's armies of conquest.

Intensified Nazi activities in the free city of Danzig were reported officially to the League of Nations today by Sean Lester, High Commissioner of Danzig, at a private meeting of the council.

Stanley M. Bruce of Australia presided. Lester's report stressed charges Nazi leaders were defying more and more the Danzig constitution, guaranteed by the League.

Lester quoted Albert Forster, a Nazi leader and Deputy in the German Reichstag, as declaring in an address:

"Our purpose is to work for a great and powerful Germany. People make a great mistake if they think we ever crawl before any institution in the world."

At the council's private meeting Bruce announced the committee of thirteen (all members of the council save Italy) appointed to examine the Italo-Ethiopian conflict, would meet late today.

'Horsewhip' Him Out of the City Says Witness

Toronto, Jan. 20 (CP)—Constable Michael O'Shea should be "horsewhipped out of the city", John Bunn, shoe store proprietor, today told the Royal Commission inquiring into Toronto police affairs.

Frank Regan, counsel for O'Shea protested at the outburst from Bunn in the witness box, but Judge Coughlin, sitting as commissioner with Judge Ross, declared Bunn might hold such views as a respectable citizen.

"Many people may have just that opinion," observed Judge Coughlin, ruling Bunn justified in expressing his view.

Bunn asserted he did not think that the evidence given by himself when O'Shea was tried and acquitted in 1933 in connection with burglaries at the Bunn store. His pressing of an investigation of re-instatement of O'Shea on the trial indirectly brought about the present inquiry.

The shoe store proprietor said he identified three pairs of shoes from O'Shea's possession as stolen from his store but only one pair was produced at the trial. He asked the court found his identification of the shoes incomplete and that he blamed his own ignorance of court matters for that.

Tells Of False Missing

Bunn today introduced documentary evidence to show that a pair of shoes, numbered inside "2-1836, Dec. 17," were taken from his store on the afternoon of the burglary but never entered on the sales register.

From 1931 to 1933 about 250 pairs of shoes were missing from his store, which was burglarized many times, Bunn said. He called police July 11, 1932, when eight pairs were missing and they told him it looked like an "inside job."

Disappointment was caused by Bunn's dry explanation he was the owner of the shoes in the dock. He took their suggestion to mean he should have identified them as his property when he was first questioned.

He kept record of each individual pair of shoes and the number was marked inside to code, he explained, thereby identifying the shoes said to have been found in O'Shea's possession on July 11.

Pressed by Mr. Regan to explain why O'Shea was the only suspected, witness said the constable's conduct deserved it.

"He broke in with a naked woman in a room," he said angrily.

"Do you think every man guilty of adultery should be expelled from the city?" asked Judge Coughlin.

BRITAIN WARNS DUCE OF BOMBING

Will Not Permit British Red Cross Hospital to be Bombed

London Jan 20 (CP)—Great Britain has given a diplomatically stern hint to Premier Mussolini that there is to be no bombing of British Red Cross units in Ethiopia. It was learned today.

Maurice Ingram, British Charge d'Affaire at Rome, called on Count Suvich, Italian Under-Secretary for foreign Affairs, and politely drew his attention to the exact location of the British Red Cross unit which reached Desye last week.

The first official British unit was to have gone to the Ogaden front under the command of Dr. Melliss. At the request of Emperor Haile Selassie, however, it was transferred to Desaye, northern headquarters of the Ethiopian troops.

Ingram called on Suvich Saturday and informed him of the location of the unit, "in order that there may be no misunderstanding."

Ingram explained the information was being given the Italian government in case it was not already known to the military authorities in East Africa and in the belief they would be glad to know "in the light of recent occurrences" the unit's exact position. Suvich is stated to have "taken note" of the information.

Rat Exterminator Arrives, Tells of Shrewdness of Rats

Robert McCudden Explains How He "Beats Rat to It"

RAT COMMUNITIES

Years of association with the common brown rat he makes a business of exterminating has given Daniel McCudden, proprietor of Canada Exterminators, Inc, Toronto, a certain respect and grudging admiration for that wily, tricky and intelligent rodent.

"Rats are smart; smarter than some people give them credit for. At times they seem possessed of almost human intelligence. And then again they have a certain instinct no other animal possesses," declared Mr. McCudden.

"They are the most individualistic of animals.

Laden with his varied assortment of bait, poisons and other apparatus for the extermination of the rat tribe, as well as other assorted vermin in homes, business places, warehouses and elsewhere, McCudden and his assistant are travelling through the province soliciting work of this nature wherever it is needed. His small car is easily identified by the prominently lettered name of the firm he heads. Yesterday Bellewille was the port of call.

Schooled At Docks.

McCudden learned his trade on the docks and wharves of the Old Country—London, to be exact—under the skilful tutelage of a master of the profession. There the exterminator is a man of letters and the extermination of vermin is an exact and applied science. Rat catchers are a peculiar calling of their own; they engage in a profession which has been accepted without question.

Twenty years ago the president of the present company came to Canada and after a period of apprenticeship in the east took up the trade of machinist. Ten years ago, however, he turned to his old profession, moved to Toronto and founded his extermination company. Since then business has been good.

Beating the Rat.

"To catch a rat you have to get up before the rat does—which is sometimes pretty early," declared Mr. McCudden. "Rats aren't generally caught napping. Contrary to the old-time saying, it is the man who is up and about early in the morning who gets the rat.

"Rats are wily. "never see rats leaving a ship? And watch the sailors of that boat follow right after them, even though the boat was tied to the dock and appeared perfectly safe at a time. Did you ever hear of them gagging up on a cat or a small dog and polishing it off right down to the bones? Did you ever see two of them carrying off an egg from a nest? And how many of them—I mean not the young and foolish ones — did you ever catch in a regular trap?"

Despite fairy tales, rats do hold councils of war and apparently decide upon matters affecting their particular community. Generally their deliberations are presided over by some old gray beard, ancient in years and wisdom. Talks of war between opposing communities of rats are also founded on fact, declares McCudden.

War On Insects.

Vermin Exterminators, Inc., does not confine itself wholly to the rid-ding of rats, however. The insect world also claims their attention. Bed bugs are also extensive and brought into play in dealing with this vermin. Cockroaches are the most bothersome and undesirable tenant. They are also the hardest to get rid of, not excepting rats. Cockroaches, declares Mr. McCudden are also possessed of an uncanny instinct or intelligence that ranks high above other forms of insect life which, together with the unprecedented qualities makes them rank as public enemy No. 1 in homes.

The dress was the gift of Mrs. H. N. Stetson, daughter of Major General H. H. McLean, V.D., former Lieutenant-Governor of the province. During the summer Mrs. Stetson and her daughter visited a Scout Jamboree in Scotland, and were much impressed with the work of the boys.

Antiquated Bootjack Object of Curiosity

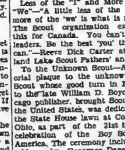
Evidently resurrected from the dim obscurity of some local attic, and said with an odd lot of used furniture, a genuine old-fashioned boot jack was purchased this week by a local second hand store owner and placed on prominents display in the show window. The antiquated relic of the day when knee boots were in vogue, even though as outmoded as the stuffed bird on a feminine hat, promptly found a second buyer, who will keep it among his souvenirs of the days that have passed.

Although puzzled over its use, the second hand store dealer had its utilitarian side explained after the relic had been purchased. A homemade affair, it was about two feet long and had a notched out section of "V" at one end. "One foot went to hold the sock in place on the floor and the other foot went with the boot into the "V" for a better pull" he was told.

Distinctly an object 'a're among collectors, the common boot jack has for some time been looked upon as a likely piece for the average collector of Canadiana. Only in the rural sections at the present time are any of the ten regular boot jacks be unearthed. It was reported by one veteran resident.

"The young folks nowadays wouldn't know one if they saw it. But ask any old timer what a boot Jack is and he'll probably be able to tell you of the many times he has used one back in the good old days" declared the resident.

Picton Imitates Move for Ice Racing



Reminiscent of the days when ice racing on the Bay of Quinte was one of the leading winter sports in this city years ago, horsemen of Prince Edward County and particularly Picton district are again focusing their attention on sport. Last month, local racing enthusiasts have been advised, ice races will be held at Picton, and it is expected that a large number of entries will be made in the event. It is expected that some of the horses will be brought from as far as Amherst Island.

A movement is on foot in Trenton to have a race meet there following the Picton races, it is reported, MP. Wallace Nassens, well known horseman is one of the leading proponents of the scheme. Whether any Belleville horse owners will take part in either event has not been stated by some who were questioned.

THOMASBURG

Thomasburg—The writer of the following verses is Frank Brough, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. R. Brough, Thomasburg. He fractured his leg recently while skating, and when he was being conveyed to Belleville Hospital, the car overturned. The injured boy had to be dragged feet first from the car.

On December first, just chirring around,
I got down my skates and went down to the pond.
The ice wasn't good but I thought it would do,
So I sat down to work and pulled off my shoes.
I put on my skates, and also my straps,
I put on my mittens and pulled down my caps.
I started out skating, went 'round about twice,
When all of a sudden I broke through the ice.
My right leg went up, and oh boy! I came down.
My left leg went down, and I was drowned.
I thank I was heard for ten miles around.
I knotted my neck, but it wasn't broke,
I looked at my leg, but it was no joke.
So I rolled over and started to yell,
Which no one came near at all so I crawled.
Then came an old man, but he was deaf,
He was limping around in need of help.
Along came Gerald Reid, a pretty good lad,
Just in the nick of time to help me out.
They hooked up the horses, and grabbed hold of the reins,
And came to my rescue, and so carried my pains.
They brought me home safely, and was I glad!
They phoned for the doctor and also for Dad.
Dr. Pedley soon came, My, wasn't he mad?
For after he fixed me, I wasn't so bad.
He eased all my pains, and also my nerves,
Then fixed me all up for going 'round curves.
We started for Belleville to have an X-ray,
The roads were quite icy, but the doctor kept gay.
We were sitting along at a nice quiet speed,
When the car started jumping like a runaway steed.
The car skidded around and just hit three times,
I couldn't get out, I was back in behind.
Mother was scared — Doctor kept cheerful,
And I was so scared I almost turned gray.
The car skidded around and sat hit the ditch,
And boys it turned over—bumpity bump!
The doctor was out as quick as a cat,
And Mother was wishing she could do this or that.
She climbed on the seat and looked all around,
And men helped her out and safe they left me in there, and I was glad.
I was getting cold, yes, as cold as a stone.
He'd come for the doctor and they were quite scared.
They took the car back with my feet in the dir.
The people were hollering and jumping around.
Oh, how I did wish I could walk on the ground.
Along came a fellow says "What happened to you?"
Says I "It might be Lincoln, but it isn't you see".
Along came two fellows, pleasant and kind,
And nobody must do, but I get in behind.
Dr. Pedley examined my leg, 'twas a pretty bad break.
He very skilled till morning to operate.
Drs. McCreary, Pedley and Robertson,
Started to work to see what they could do.
Under Anaesthetic came in, they gave him a gown.
They worked some help to pull the leg down.
They got it all done — the leg in a cast.
Two months in the house, with my leg held fast.
They brought me my dinner, boys, was I glad?
I was as hungry as any young lad.
They brought me my coat, and also my hat,
And all of a sudden I heard a light tap.
Brother Arthur had come, well I declare!
To take me back home, so it was-n't so bad.
The car was enough for my little slay,
Boys, do be careful whenever you play.
Be sure the ice will carry a ton
Before you start to have any fun!

SOVIET INCREASES ARMED STRENGTH—The Soviet government has announced an increase in her standing army to 1,500,000 men with a trained reserve of 10,000,000 an increase in her military and armament budget, and an increase in her air forces. All the report says, is due to the alliance of Germany and Japan. These two nations, the Soviet government believes, are preparing to attack the Soviet Union, and Russia's war commissars believe preparedness is the better part of valor. Above shows a recent parade of the Red army in Red Square in Moscow.

HOFFMAN WILENTZ

PERSONAL FRIENDS—BITTER ENEMIES—Twenty years of personal and political rivalry culminated in the clash between Governor Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey and Attorney-General David T. Wilentz over Bruno Hauptmann's execution date. Since they were together, each has opposed the other and each has sought to surpass the other. Their stirring clash over the Hauptmann case yesterday has not to be the last. Friends say Governor Hoffman, a Republican possesses presidential ambitions and he hopes to enter the White House through the United States Senate. And associates of Attorney-General Wilentz, who is a Democrat, say he also is a Senatorial candidate, although he is barred by birth abroad from the presidency. As long as both live, they probably will remain political rivals—though each professes personal friendship for the other.

Starlings, Pigeons, Owl, Haunt City Tower

Clamorous starlings who have invaded the city hall tower at the start of cold weather have taken up quarters in the upper parts of the city hall tower and are disputing possession with the few remaining pigeons that have returned to their old nesting places following repair work on the tower completed this fall. A small, grey girl has also been observed flying back and forth from the tower during the last few evenings at dusk.

PRAYERS FOR THE KING

Sandringham is the centre of the world for the present as five hundred millions of subjects of every race and clime turn their thoughts thither where lies gravely stricken their beloved king. From thousands of fanes and millions of hearts have been offered and will continue to be offered continuously prayers for His Majesty's recovery.

The King is putting up a brave and tenacious fight against his illness, and today's early bulletins were taken as indicating a "tremendous will to live."

The King knows his empire is concerned over his state of health, and he knows that the world outside of the British Empire halts to inquire as to his health and to offer prayers for his restoration to health.

To not only Empire but the rest of the world besides the King is "this good man", the highest tribute which can be paid to king or peasant. It is because he is this good man and this good king that the entire world is concerned over his health.

POET OF EMPIRE

Rudyard Kipling, who caught the fancy of the world years ago after a bitter fight for recognition, who he almost starved in a London garret, and who wrote in early life the most of the work which will endure the ravages of time and then went into semi-retirement in the English countryside, is gone. The man who created immortal characters in his early stories bringing to literary life the British Tommy and finding a niche for him in the empire's heart and who sang such immortal songs as "Recessional" with its great refrain "Lord God to Hosts Be With us yet, lest we forget", which is known to every patriot and every churchgoer, has dropped the pen and gone into the realm of spirit.

It was with joy that the Empire and the world at large observed his seventieth birthday a few weeks ago, though he himself observed it quietly. Kipling like the Empire and the world suffered a great sorrow twenty years ago, when the nations fought. Into the abyss of death descended his only son. The father never recovered. This shadow led to his retirement into the quiet of the English countryside. He never forgave the Germans for the events of 1914-1918.

But there he was not content to let events pass quite unnoticed. Last May during the silver jubilee ceremonies of His Majesty King George V, Kipling spoke vigorously on the need of national security. True prophet, he spoke before others dared to speak. Since last May the world has seen a demonstration of the need of what Kipling referred to. His literary production was low of late years, though he did pen the vigorous lines of the jubilee anthem "The King and the Sea."

In his stories he first won fame, but for their greatness, the reputation was long delayed. The stories have his great style.

Kipling was a native of Bombay, India, where he was born in 1865, his father being a professor of architecture and sculpture. He was educated in England and his eyesight failed at ten due to overstrain. At sixteen he returned to India and sub-edited newspapers for seven years and wrote army ballads on the side, telling of the life of the British soldier. He tried America and after two years went back to England and almost starved in a garret. At last he found a publisher and soon he was wealthy and famous. He came to America again on travels and seemed destined to become a United States resident but publicity and autograph-hunters chased him out in 1897. He wrote over a score of volumes in Vermont.

Kipling has a racy powerful style. His stories charmed the public and have not lost their hold.

Kipling was like a true Englishman, he loved the quiet of the countryside. His home at Burwash in Sussex was an ideal one to him. It was high-walled, moat-encircled and fortified against intrusion. It was built by an iron monger who lived in the spacious days of Queen Elizabeth.

Debt is owing Kipling for many things. He brought the Tommy into literature, he was a direct speaker, yet never faltered. He has written some of the finest stories and poems in the language. His moral tone was always healthy.

Kipling missed the laureateship, though the most famous of writers in both verse and prose. His relative position in British art remains in the custody of future generations. The present poet laureate is one of the greatest word artists and how his ultimate fame will rank with Kipling's no one knows nor can predict.

When earth's last picture is painted, and the tubes are twisted and dried,
When the oldest colours have faded, and the youngest critic has died,
We shall rest, and faith, we shall need it—lie down for an aeon or two,
Till the Master of all good workmen shall set us to work anew.

WHO IS THE PREMIER OF ALBERTA?

That's a question most anybody who reads the newspapers can answer. Aberhart, the school teacher and radio prophet.

Answers as to the identity of Premiers of other provinces would not be so prompt or numerous, with the exception perhaps of Premier Mitch Hepburn, who is "good copy". Aberhart promised people enough money to live on without working for it and sprang into prominence overnight as a Front Page proposition. Unfortunately for him his party was successful and now he's having the devils own time trying to stall off his Social Creditors. Huey Long promised everybody five thousand dollars a year as a basis of personal prosperity, but Huey did not face his creditors. Townsend and Sinclair are still thriving on promises in California, although Townsend has a long row to hoe and Sinclair because he promises two hundred dollars per month per head while Sinclair would only promise fifty. What's the use of being a piker promiser when the payoff can be postponed indefinitely, as long as the voters refuse to elect the prophets of this new prosperity. Just as soon as they do the whole castle of dreams comes tumbling down, and the last stage of the prosperity fakers will be worse than the first.

WHO IS THE PREMIER OF ALBERTA?

That's a question most anybody who reads the newspapers can answer. Aberhart, the school teacher and radio prophet.

Answers as to the identity of Premiers of other provinces would not be so prompt or numerous, with the exception perhaps of Premier Mitch Hepburn, who is "good copy". Aberhart promised people enough money to live on without working for it and sprang into prominence overnight as a Front Page proposition. Unfortunately for him his party was successful and now he's having the devils own time trying to stall off his Social Creditors. Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was doing the crossword puzzle in her paper and pop was reading the news in his, again. Well, here's a little item that will to interist you, to say the least. Listen this headline: Man Wins Divorce Because Wife Devotes Time to Crossword Puzzles.

I saw that and I think it's the silliest thing I ever read, but there was no exceptions, ma said. And you don't need to wave it flaunchingly in my face because you see things in the paper too, and I saw that a woman got a divorce because a man had a housefull of ash trays, and yet there were ash trays adone here there and everywhere except in the innumerable trays, so how come that unless your royal majesty when it comes to divorce getting?

My say, he must of been a very bad man indeed, I said, inasmuch as such an awkward chap, pop said, and ma said, That's very strange, because braggadocio begins at home, hee hee.

Back speaking of intriesting divorce actions, did you happen to read the case of the man who was granted a lifetime separation and custody of the 12 children because his wife persisted in torturing him by of toothpaste by squeezing them from the top instead of the bottom? pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum I do believe, of the kind, that's just an incurable figment of you imagination.

O, there's no reason for you to take it personly, pop said, I forgot the name of the man in the case, it was something like Higginbottom or Pewsister or Finance, I remember it began with a B, he said, and ma said, O you don't be you don't tell me. Well I heard of a woman who got a divorce because a man preferred the association of his own cigars at home to her company at a moving picture, and if you don't take me to the Narcissi tomite you'll be the man, she said.

If the result being he did.

TRIP TO FLORIDA

We left Belleville Tuesday the 18th November and the rain that had been threatening commenced at Whitby and we proceeded on our journey into the city for darkness and with it very wet highway. We felt safe when we reached the traffic signs and lights of Toronto, there we stayed the night. In the morning the weather was fine and we drove along the water front, through the Exhibition grounds. There we picked up our friend and fellow traveller and then started on the long journey to Florida.

We were stopped at Niagara by the Customs officers on the business of the car but it was soon settled and we went on by way of Savia, N. Y. state.

We stayed all night at the fine tourist home of Mr. and Mrs. Locke where we were very hospitably entertained. We had supper there and next morning and nearly all day passed through the state of New York, through the towns of Carlton, Albion, and Bath to Painted Post. This is a large town situated in a beautiful flat. We left New York state a little after Painted Post and turned where the words "The Susquehanna Trail" appeared on signs letters on a board. We were careful to observe this sign. It was here we got off the road on our journey down in December of last year. The trail we took along the great river of the same name then over a very changeable road. Sometimes we were on the mountain tops, then low in the valley, sometimes following streams of the mountains where the same rays could not reach us. Here in the late afternoon the highway seemed to settle about us and with what joy we welcomed the sunshine when the sun went down. A long stretch of this road was under construction and it is very hard to pass over with many cars before and behind. We heard there had been a bad accident the day before at this place.

Friday night we stayed some miles from Washington. We went through the city without much traffic and then followed N. 1 highway all the way to Jacksonville, Florida. We found this a very fine road to travel, and leads into a southeasterly direction for some time. We passed through Alexandria, Fredericksburg, Petersburg. We continued from there through Virginia, passing through the towns of Norfina, Henderson. We stopped over time at Raleigh, the capital of North Carolina. Here we had the oil changed in the car and spent some time at the Sir Walter Raleigh hotel. We stopped at some beautiful towns in North and South Carolina. Then on through several towns through beautiful scenery to Aberdeen where we spent the night. This home is a beautiful colonial mansion, kept by a handsome southern lady called Mrs Farrell. Then on through South Carolina, Georgia and at last Florida. We avoided Jacksonville by taking another road. We crossed the state passing Brocksville and going by Clearwater and going by the Causeway Bridge into the city. We had fine time all the way and good roads. We were glad that we started earlier than last year. We arrived in St. Petersburg on Thursday morning. Just one week and a day on the road and had no trouble except for repairs on the car. We have had very cold weather in Florida but the sun is shining today Dec. 23, and we hope the green benches will soon come into their own. The following poem written last winter by Mrs. Helen B. Anderson of Chicago while on a visit here describes well the green benches:

Upon the green benches in St. Petersburg street.
The sun-seeking tourists very happily meet.
Merry maidens are there from Missouri to Maine,
And spinsters and widows alluring and fain.
Gay gallants are there with suits spick and span.
The young and the old and the shrewd business man.
Grandfathers we see and grandmothers gay,
And husbands and wives their devotion display.
While the widower views with covetous eye,
The gay dashing damsel who smiles passing by.
Newcomers are told to beware of soft soap.
For gallants are known to hand out such dope.
But the friends that we meet on these benches so green,
Are the friendliest people, the best ever seen.
We sit in the sun and we talk to each other,
As friend unto friend and brother with brother,
Forgetting the line that doth us divide.
As here on the benches we sit side by side.
In winter will linger these days when we meet,
Those gay winter tourists in the town of St. Pete.

We cannot wonder far from the thought of Christmas, for the city is one huge decoration. Everywhere the christmas spirit is manifest, in the churches and stores and along the streets. The old "Yuletide" carol selections of the past years is resplendent with a large and beautiful tree and crysanthemums adorn the walls. We hear every day the steady tinkling of the bells of the Army lasses as they stand by their kettles from morning till night.

INFORMAL PORTRAITS OF A LADY IN AN EMOTIONAL SERIES—3—Don't let this coy smile fool you. This Lupe Velez is as changeable as to-day's weather. First she is coy. 2. And then she tapers off into a more morose mood. A suggestion of a frown starts wrinkling her forehead. 3. The frowning continues. Lupe's eyes flash fire. Look out can did camera, a tigress is comin' atcha! 4. A tooth-bared snarl in full fury—and the camera shutter clicks. 5. But the unpleasant phase passes and she now presents this study of nonchalance a la Tarzan. 6. Hands clapped to her ears, Lupe bubbles again. Stop es! Stop es! Johnny and I nevalre fight.

Keep AHEAD of the JONESES

There's just one way to be "better off" than the other people on your street. In order to keep ahead, you must think and act first. And that can be done by any one who decides to do it, whatever the family income.

For instance, some people are smart enough to buy things when prices are down. Right now, of course, you can find sheets and towels and other supplies for the house at lowest-this-year prices. And that isn't all . . . Some time this winter you will find underwear for the children, gloves for yourself, pyjamas for the head of the house—and many, many more things offered at 'way-down prices.

All sorts of special buys will keep bobbing up, if you watch the advertisements in this newspaper—and keep thinking ahead, and buying ahead.

Where will you get all the money, you ask? . . . Well, it doesn't take MORE money to be better off, this way. Actually it takes LESS. The pennies you save by timely buying add up to dollars in the end.

Food Chain Stores Do 29.9 P.C. of Business

There were 86 food chain companies in Canada in 1936 operating 3,286 stores with sales of $113,910,800. In 1933 there were 91 food chain companies with 3,299 stores and $139,638,000 in sales while in 1930, the earliest year for which data are available, there were 97 chain systems with 3,383 stores and $177,583,500 in sales. Thus while the value of chain sales for 1934 was still 17.8 per cent below the 1930 level, it was 1.2 per cent higher than the minimum reported for 1933.

A comparison of chain store sales with total retail sales shows that the 86 food chain companies operating in 1934 transacted 29.9 per cent of the business of all similar stores, including both chains and independents, for that year. Ratios of chain store sales to total sales for earlier years are 31 per cent for 1933, 29.7 for 1932, 29.0 or 1931 and 36.1 for 1930.

Keep Yourself In Good Shape With Exercise

Writer Preaches Wisdom of Holding System in Right Order

Whether you are a man or woman, boy or girl, you should exercise. Exercise is the best tonic in the world. It builds up the entire system, makes you look better, feel better, and work better. Exercise is the best way to keep fit.

Exercise strengthens muscles and at the same time burns up the fat cells. The trouble is that they keep weight has little inclination to be active. So flabbiness results, the clogging of heart and a strong will, as well as a system of dieting and exercising.

Nothing works quite so well as a figure as a gym. If that isn't possible, have a regular time for a workout. Be methodical. Be regular. At night one is likely to be tired, and a tired body should not work.

Lie flat in the bed, lift and lower the legs slowly. Not easy. Place the hands under the hips, lift the legs until you are just about standing on the top of your neck. Take your time. If your heart hammers from exertion, stop and rest. Gradually. Bending and twisting exercises are helpful; a brisk walking. Bicycling will trim down the feminine shape.

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 20.—(CP)—With a canary the sole inmate of the home not affected by gas fumes from the furnace, four members of the household of George Webb were overcome here Saturday night. Timely arrival of George Webb, Jr., who sumponed Dr. S. G. Henry, brought aid to the stricken family.

Dr. Henry brought with him an oxygen tank and immediately used it, resuscitating Margaret, 31, Shirley, 16, Ellen 19 and Mrs. Webb's brother, Charles Faulkner. Today they were all recovering from the effects of the gas. When aid came to the stricken members of the household, the canary was hopping gaily about in its cage.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

When Hubby Is Bored "Out Doors"

Dear Miss Fairfax:

The morning's mail brings me a letter from a lady bewailing the fact that she has married a man who is "beautiful but dumb," she goes on to say. That description is just as applicable to men as women, and quite as disastrous in wedding a beauty.

During the last few years, colleges and universities all over United States have been offering courses which, under various titles, may be termed "How to choose a wife" or "How to choose a husband."

And, while girls have been warned against the gambler, the spendthrift, the philanderer and the conceitedive gentleman who doesn't work and never will, a man, this appears to be the first warning I've heard against the dumb beautiful Adonis.

As a riddle, the Sphinx is nothing compared to the average husband, and no woman can tell before marriage how strange and uncharted currents of disposition she is going to encounter in the love affair seems so perfect.

This lady who wrote to me, as beautiful goddess, married a faultless profile and an athlete's physique. Both of these qualifications have brought a plague of troubles in their wake.

I will attempt saying that a man "handsomer than any cinema star" is a type forbidden to wise ladies, multitudes of them in fact, have worked on the marriage that Dumb Adonis as was his wife. They pursue him, write letters to him, embroider him handkerchiefs, send him silk stockings and gifts of perfume. Mostly produced especially for him.

Naturally, he has never done a day's work since his wife married him. At that time the job—like prosperity — was just around the corner. But it has continued to remain in hiding, and the hard-working wife comes home after her day sampling the home-made candy, trying on the hand-made neckties and flourishing the initialed handkerchiefs.

Being only human, this wife has her faults, and she gets, with a dash of wormwood flavored with gall: "I feel like Queen Victoria who read the news of the paper saying they would like to give away a magnificent, thoroughbred horse on condition that has taken many beauty prizes in cat shows."

Of course, she doesn't feel that way at all, because every other line of her letter reveals how proud and devoted she is to her "beautiful but dumb" spouse. Only the fact the ladies send him gets on her nerves and she wishes to Heaven she could find a way to earn the cash and cook it before she goes to work so that she could come home to him.

For Adonis has no gifts of usefulness whatever. He can't even add. And she admits that he does "look silly drying the dishes, or shoving the vacuum cleaner."

She asks if I have any suggestions to make, and I must say the problem presents nearly difficulties. If he belonged to me, I'd tell to get him in the movies or make a manikin of him — they have made fortunes from men who are famous Clothes in haberdasheries — or failing this, I should teach him to be useful around the house.

BIRTH-ANNOUNCEMENT CARDS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please help me with the following:

1. In the sending of birth announcement cards is it much in keeping for a girl? I would like to send a few, but don't like to appear presumptuous if it wouldn't want to think they had to send gifts?

2. Should any gifts that are received be acknowledged by a note, the same as when a wedding gift, whether you thank the giver in person at the time, or not?

3. Should a baby's name be written Jane, and he is always called "Jim," and are some people hurt the baby the sams two names, but you want to call him "Jim," should you write "Jim" or the baby's name?

M.

There is no reason to interpret the receiving of a birth-announcement card as a suggestion that a gift should be sent to acknowledge the card. The birth announcement is for the purpose of announcement and "requires" no gift, unless the receiver really wishes to send a gift.

2. It is gracious to acknowledge such gifts by a note of thanks even if the giver has been thanked at the time the gift has been received. It takes such a short time to write such a note of appreciation, and it makes the giver happy that the gift has been happily and graciously received.

3. Yes, the formal name of the baby named for the father should always be Junior after the name, William James Brown, junior. The fact that you are going to use a different nickname for the baby doesn't make any difference with the form of the formal name.

Betrothal Etiquette

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Is it or is it not proper for a girl who is engaged to spend the week-end at the home of her fiance?

2. When a couple have had their "understanding," it is necessary for the man to buy the girl's family

The story of an aristocratic Russian, son of a colonel in the Imperial Cavalry Regiment, whose home was Petersburg, but who, from the time he was thirteen years of age, took his "place at dinner" in his book "Dorian." The book is predominantly one of carnage in the face of suffering and disaster. His father, broken and enfeebled, escaped to Paris where he died of misery and starvation. Poverty, hardship and hunger could not destroy Schwenoff's love for Russian ballet. He became a ballet dancer in the Theatre School and his description of the Communist Revolution from a large part of his narrative. "Communists are divided into three kinds: the militant Communist with a fanatical belief in his Communist faith; the moderate Communists who are merely human, with all the usual human ambitions, desires and weaknesses; finally there are the Communists who are not Communists, pseudo-Communists, who have no faith and no belief in anything, nevertheless born to enter the ranks of the party for the material benefits the Communists can give." The predominance of this third indicated "Schwenoff" to abandon his career in the Russian Theatre and to smuggle himself and other into Manchuria. He had come to the conclusion that "the Communist artist is a contradiction in terms, for an artist is free, and only free, to develop his interrelated individualism."

Three books of Canadian interest, one fiction, one a new non-fiction, "Men and Deeds" by Jean Burton, "Gone Haying" by John Murray Gibbon and "To Nova Scotia" by Sir Andrew Macphail.

"Men and Deeds" is a collection of historical papers by John Buchan (Lord Tweedsmuir) on such topics include "The Canaal and the Frontier," "Sir Walter Raleigh's Last Voyage," "The Massacre of Glencoe," "Lord Rosebery: Memories, Opinions and Leadership," "Lord Rosebery" and "The Kirk in Scotland." John Buchan's contribution to Canadian fact as well as fiction. "How does Canada differ from the United States?" soldier, a child, a girl at the door of the cottage, a farmer at the end of furrow and almost of Nature". History is full of these tremendous "Interpretations" and Mr. Buchan preserves in his some figure of Canada.

John Murray Gibbon founder of the Canadian Author's Association has written of the commercial development of Canada from the first days of the fur trade to the present, in his book "Steel of Empire." Dealing chiefly the story of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Northwest Passage of today," the author traces from early beginnings the vision of the explorers, who pioneered in the struggles of the fur traders, the coming of railroads, the building of steamships, the development of construction and final completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The volume is attractive, illustrated with seventeen full page illustrations and a number of other illustrations by Canadian artists as well as many photographs.

"To Nova Scotia" is a travel book and more than a guide book to wind and salt water, of rocks and woods. T. Morris Longstreth, author writes of his journey from Halifax along the shores of Nova Scotia, and as many others have seemed that I have been missing something in England, I decided to Nova Scotia and was amazed and also ten years' tour of Canada. I would be quite uninformed about its loveliest province." Sir Andrew Macphail, editor of the Montreal Medical Journal, "To Nova Scotia" confuses his native provinces with the Promised Land."

NOT OPPORTUNE SAYS COMMITTEE

Will Not Send Commission to Ethiopia or Give Financial Support

By JOSEPH E. SHARKEY
Associated Press Staff Writer

Geneva, Jan. 20.—(AP)—The League of Nations' Committee of 13 today took the question of sending a commission of inquiry to Ethiopia under advisement but decided that nation were not opportune and were, furthermore, outside the competence of the committee.

Both questions had been raised by Emperor Haile Selassie. He had asked for a commission to determine whether Italy or Ethiopia was the aggressor nation in the present war in East Africa. He also had pressed for material aid in the shape of financial support.

Senada Telegram

It was indicated, however, while the committee was ready to exercise its functions for conciliation, all other proposals were before it for the present time.

The committee decided sanctions were entirely a matter for the consideration of the League Council at its particular purpose.

Foreign Minister Mussolini of Italy sent a telegram to Max Hober of the International Red Cross announcing Italy would withdraw Committee would be sent to the war zone to investigate the charges and accusations of the Red Cross Convention were being observed.

Mussolini announced the Ethiopian troops as violating the Geneva Red Cross Convention "by heinous atrocities upon the dead and wounded Italian prisoners in defiance of the elementary principles of civilization and humanity."

The committee further added Italy makes it her duty to respect the Red Cross and will do everything in its power to prevent the use by Italian troops.

While the committee of 13 did no; approve of sending a commission to Ethiopia, it was believed by many observers that in view of Mussolini's telegram, some kind of a red cross commission would be sent.

TORONTO INDUSTRIALS

Toronto, Jan. 20 (CP)—Toronto industrial market was slow and heavy today, minor recessions outweighing gains over the board. Bra-sillan, in considerable turnover, advanced ½ to 10 but failed to hold and International Nickel was off ⅛ to 46. Smelters held firm to strong. Losers ranging up to a half point appeared in the distillery group, utilities and industrials. The Ontario power issues and in the foods Canada preferreds predominated. Canadian Malartic preferred fell back 1% to 48.

An unsteady New York Board was a depressing influence locally and there may have been some reflection here of the London market disturbance resulting from the King's illness.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Jan. 20 (CP)—Higher valued gains dotted a generally firmer tendency in the early afternoon on the Toronto Mining market, but profit-taking sessions ruled over the rest of the board. Volume continued to show mainly in the secondary gold stocks.

Heavy buying Beattie carried the price up 10 cents to 1.70 and gains were showing this afternoon also for Dome, Lake Shore, Wright Hargreaves and Pamour. Little Long Lac, Coniaurum and Sylvanite and Buffalo-Ankerite were off, the latter dropping 15 cents.

A few golds or more was boarded for Noranda with the trade mainly in Hollinger, Bob and Hudson Bay was slightly off color, both reflecting a decrease in the London copper price.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Jan. 20—Except for a few specialties, the closing hour market was rather cheerless in today's dull session.

While Douglas got up about 3, and Boeing, Sperry and Curtiss-Wright were fractionally higher, the majority of the rails, steels, mines and motors were inclined to be a point or two more.

Minor gains were shown by Montgomery Ward, General Electric, American Telephone, Consolidated Gas, Standard and Houston Oil. Losers included U.S. Steel, Sears Roebuck, Allied Chemical, Du Pont, Consolidated Gas, Western Union, Radio, Eastman Kodak, U. S. Smelting and Cerro de Pasco. The late tone was steady. Transfers approximated 1,000,000 shares.

"Recesional" Sung at Bridge Street Church

Board Room Gossip

As supplied by Biggar and Crawford by Financial Service.

Secrets of the Noranda Area.

It sometimes happens that a lively argument, about the why and wherefore of a mineral deposit that has been discovered and made into a mine dictates its secrets and thereby gives the lie to the discoverer additional deposits. Such an argument has been started (it is hoped by the authority in the January "Bulletin" of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy) P. J. Conolly and R. C. Hart have studied in detail the rocks in the Noranda Lake area, surrounding the Noranda mine, and appear to have solved at least part of the puzzle presented by that mixture of fragile, hard, soluble and semi-soluble. In the midst of this apparent muddle of rocks is the series of copper-gold deposits that constitutes the great Noranda mine. It is not yet known why those deposits have been formed in this particular place. The nature and distribution of the rocks now provided by Messrs. Connolly and Hart, along with their deductions, may give the reason.

Last summer a bulletin was issued by the Ontario Dept. of Mines giving the results of the Ontario Geological Survey in field work with a view to directing the efforts of prospectors and mine-makers throughout this broad Dominion. Among the information thus gained is giving a good return. The more detailed investigations, such as those of Messrs. Connolly and Hart, are similarly valuable and this particular paper will, it is hoped, start a lively and fruitful discussion.

The Noranda local mine gave a very good account of itself last week, while New York exhibited some nervousness over the uncertainty of the Supreme Court's decision on the Tri-Valley case, which is expected today. It is the general opinion that a setback in New York will be short-lived and in some quarters is greatly desired as it will give the public a chance to consider technical position.

Earnings reports covering results of 1935 operations are being made appearing in volume. As encouraging as the majority of these figures will be, most of the statements have already been adequately discounted by stock prices, and it is to the future that investors must look.

Traders, especially those with limited resources, know that the lower the price of the stock the greater the chance for profit on a percentage basis; and experienced they argue that in this type of market nobody cares to be a shark, allow a "tip" to escape in a brokerage house boardroom, and then let nature take its course.

Noranda.

For the full year of 1935 Noranda Mines Limited is expected to report net income of the neighborhood of $3,900,000 or the equivalent of about $2.50 a share. This is a good showing in the company's history. The management has been highly successful in the policy of writing off around 40 cents a share for depreciation annually. The plant and equipment will soon stand on the books at $5 and Noranda has derived a great benefit from the advance in the price of copper and as a further increase in this connection is looked for by the best informed experienced mining experts profit for 1936 will be a manner one for this company. The ore reserves position of the stock is listed on the London Stock Exchange, Noranda will have an all-British flavor.

International Petroleum

International Petroleum Company is controlled by International Oil Limited by the Standard Oil of New Jersey. It operates extensive oil and crude petroleum placing them among the world's big producers.

All provisions for dividends production were exceeded in 1935, the output was about 20,000,000 bbls. which compared with a total of 31,-446,000 bbls. in 1934 and 17,000,000 the previous high level of production. "Peter" Paul drew a comparison between from our steadily advancing price of crude oil in the United States as the principal factor based on these quotations. The company does not distribute its earnings in ports, so that profits for the six months which ended on December 31 are not available to the public.

Despite the rather meagre information concerning the company's operations there is every confidence held by the Standard Oil of New Jersey is a strengthening factor in the company's position. Evidence of recent political disturbance in Colombia will not prove harmful to the company's position.

International Nickel

Moving from 22.25 a share in 1935 to the present day quotation of 46 is a rise that in the stock has not been reached since the boom days of 1929 is nothing short of marvellous. The rise in the stock has firm foundations. Net income for last year will be the largest in the company's history and the outlook is exceedingly good. International Nickel has liquidated its debenture debt several months ahead of time when the conversion programme is completed the shareholders can look forward to handsome dividends to reciting much higher dividends.

Hollinger

Investors are buying Hollinger around present levels on the basis that richer ore will be found in the company this year and under such circumstances it is logical to expect that dividends will be larger than they were in 1935.

Winnipeg, Jan. 20 (CP)—Reflecting weakness at Liverpool, prices of wheat eased fractionally in quiet, early trading on Winnipeg Grain Exchange today. Values near mid session were 1-8 to 3-8 cent lower. May at 85 7-8 and July 85 3-4 and October 87 5-8 cents.

Toronto Leafs Win and Lose While Montreal Maroons Win To Top Canadian Section

Conacher, Coaching Maroons Scoring Winning Goal Against Americs

CANADIENS WIN

Defeat Rangers, While Hawks Drop Bruins With 3-1 Score

By A. E. FULFORD

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Most hockey managers yell "Get out there and get me a goal" when their team needs one - but Lionel Conacher has a different method. He steps out on the ice and shows his players how to win the game.

Making his debut as player-manager of Montreal Maroons last night at New York, the "big train" won from Americans 3-1 in the third period with a brilliant solo goal.

If he can keep that up he is sure to be reelected to guide the Stanley cup champions until Tommy Gorman has recovered. Rumor has it Gorman will not be well enough to pilot Maroons against title season.

The win from Americans shot Maroons into the National League's Canadian Division leadership. Earlier Toronto Maple Leafs had held the spot for 24 hours by beating Boston Bruins at Toronto Saturday. Without Charlie Conacher and Joe Primeau, they bundled to keep up the pace and Detroit beat them 4-0 last night.

The Maroon victory also shot Americans into the Canadian Division cellar when Chicago Black Hawks defeated New York Rangers 3-1 in Montreal Saturday night. Boston lost both games, Montreal bowling 3-1, to Chicago last night after taking a defeat from Leafs Saturday.

In Front Most of Game

Maroons were out in front for most of the game at Madison Square Garden, Jimmy Ward shot them into the lead midway through the first period and they readied the lead until Art Chapman combined with Sweeney Schriner and Merle Wiseman for a goal in the third.

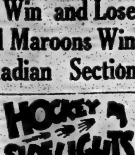
Conacher couldn't see starting his Maroon managerial career with a tie so a minute and a half later he sped through the whole American team alone, drew Roy Worters to one side of the net and flipped the winning tally past him.

Another veteran, Frank "King" Clancy of Toronto Leafs stood out in the game with Bruins at Toronto. Leafs hadn't won once in six games, when he led a discouraged but still fighting troupe of players out against the bruising Bruins.

He played his best game of the season and it was good enough to lead to an effort that left Bruins far behind. Art Jackson, Pep Kelly and Andy Blair scored in the second period before Boston got their first goal through Cooney Weiland and Clancy and Bill Thoms got markers in the third. Babe Siebert got the second Boston counter on a penalty shot in that period.

A misconduct penalty for talking back to Referee Mike Rodden and three minors at Toronto and three more at Detroit last night gave Red Horner, Leaf defenceman, a total hi of minutes in the box for the two games and brought his total time this season to 118 minutes.

No Match For Detroit



Tired after third good showing against Bruins, Leafs were no match for the Reds in Detroit. Detroit wings scored one goal in the first period, added two in the second and another in the third, while shutting Leafs out. Johnny Sorrell, Syd Howe, Pete Kelly and Bucko McDonald were their successful marksmen.

Boston had the score tied for 16 minutes at Chicago last night but Louis Trudel came through with a goal six minutes before the end of the third, that gave Hawks the game and put them three points up on Bruins.

Hawks enjoyed a one goal margin from late in the first period when Johnny Gottselig scored the first goal of the game until Weiland evened things up a minute and a half after the third started.

Paul Haynes and Leroy Goldsworthy were the scoring ace aides in the Canadien win from Rangers. Both got a goal and an assist and Goldsworthy tied with Aurel Joliat for his teammate, as the League's leading goal getter. Each has 12.

Haynes scored in the third minute of the game and Rangers were unable to even it up until 13 minutes of the third period had been played when Frank Boucher tallied on a play with Butch Keeling and Glen Brydson. Johnny Gagnon put Canadiens ahead again four minutes later and Goldsworthy got their third goal two minutes after that.

By RAY COLLETT

When they wrote the Old Man River song that "just keeps rollin' along" somebody must have thought of Aurel Joliat, Montreal Canadiens' gorgeous little forward who this year is playing his fourteenth season in big time hockey livery. The marvel man he might be called, and the name would not be ill-suited.

Where Aurel—"Quetio" to the fanatical Canadiens' fans in Montreal—broke into the N.H.L. in 1922 he weighed between 150 and 160 pounds. Illnesses and the ravages pass he set gradually wore him down till at 133 pounds he is the smallest forward in stick consistently on the hockey ladder.

Terrific speed, brilliant skating ability and a stick handling wizardry that has bewildered the best in faithful ever since it first broke upon their horizon has been the little fast-winger's forte. Years add of Joliat that he could stop and turn on a dime.

Penalties once played a monster part in his career. He had a hair-trigger temper, was temperamental and high-strung. One of the earliest players to wear a cap on the ice, Aurel was infuriated beyond control when opponents knocked it off. Of late the mellowing influence has mellowed without losing his uncanny hockey wizardry.

His father is Ottawa's chief of detectives. Aurel, known at times as the Silent Man, sometimes amazed with brilliant and fluent after-dinner speeches. He studied golf assiduously. Musical to a degree, he plays the violin, banjo and ukulele. In addition to remaining one of the greatest scoring threats in the game, he has become the field-general for Canadiens and much of the strategy the team uses is executed and supervised by the fleet little winger.

FAST SWIMMERS—Semyon Bolchanov comes out of the water of the Proletarf Pool in Moscow, U.S.S.R., after setting a new world record for the 100-metre breast stroke, swim event. He cut the time from 1.10 to 1.08.

SYRACUSE STARS STILL WINNING

Team Will Miss Markle Who Has Been Sent to The Leafs

(By The Canadian Press)

Syracuse Stars were resting comfortably atop the Eastern section of the International Hockey League race today but the team's board of strategy were wondering just how the pace-setters would click minus Bill Markle. The former Owen Sound youth who led the Stars to one of their two sparkling week-end victories will wear Toronto Maple Leaf livery the next time out.

Markle was the only player credited with one assist as the Stars downed Cleveland Indians 5-3 at Syracuse Saturday night and perched in front of the pack th the scoring ace with a total of 30 points. He failed to add to his count Sunday, when his mates went on to trim Providence Tecumseks 4-2 in what may be his last J. H. L. game.

Buffalo Bisons helped make the week-end unpleasant for the Tecs when they pasted them 4-2 in Port Erie Saturday. The win placed the fighting Bisons on even terms with London in second place in the Eastern section.

MAGEDOMAS LOSE TO AIR FORCE 3-0

Queen's Also Taken Into Camp 5-1 by The LaSalle Squad

Ottawa, Jan. 20 (CP)—Brockville finally met their first defeat of the current season in the Ottawa Senior City Hockey League when they dropped a 3-0 decision to the Royal Canadian Air Force here Saturday night. It was a game that bristled with action, played before 2,000 fans, the largest attendance this season.

The win gave the flyers a berth in second place of the league standing, sharing it with Emeralds. Both have 11 points. In the first game of the doubleheader Queen's University were defeated by Lasalle 5-1 in a fast, wide-open game.

Scoring a goal in each of the three periods, R.C.A.F. staved off a whirlwind Brockville attack in the last 19 minutes of play when the Magedomas had only forwards on the ice. The Magedomas broke in time after time but goalie St. Denis proved impregnable.

The Queen's-Lasalle tilt was a fairly even battle. The students, however, lacked the finish of Lasalle in the Lasalle net to put aside 32 shots against 27 for Bill Gowen. Johnny Wing and Jack Holland were through alone on successive occasions in the second period but the former was tripped just as he was ready to shoot and the latter was pushed out of position.

In the third period "Summer" Woodcock was checked off his kit with a charlie horse, suffered when Paul Bordelean body-checked him into the goal post. Bordelean was given a major penalty and at this stage Lou Trudel made his most serious bid, throwing caution to the winds and sending the puppets of the Lasalle scene. Good work by the Lasalle goalie, however, kept them from more goals.

N. H. L. STARS

Lionel Conacher, Maroons, brought his team victory over New York Americans with a brilliant solo rush.

Frank Clancy, Toronto, led Leafs to comeback against the Boston Bruins.

Louis Trudel, Chicago, scored the winning goal when Hawks beat Boston 3-1.

HOCKEY'S BIG SEVEN

Cooney Weiland, Boston Bruins' centre, picked up two goals over the week-end to move into second place in the National Hockey League's big seven, three points behind leader Sweeney Schriner who made his total 22 with an assist.

Weiland's scored against Ottawa included one unassisted goal and one with Eddie Shore assisting. Schriner was in second place. Art Chapman of New York Americans and Syd Howe of Detroit Red Wings got single points to join the group and expand it to nine players.

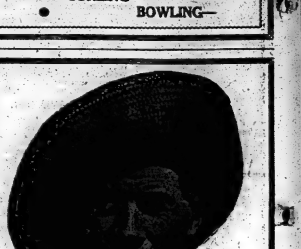
GEORGE PEPPER

Finishes Fifth in 200 Mile Race

After leading a field of 71 starters for practically the entire 200 miles, George Pepper of this city, was forced to stop for repairs and finished fifth in the American Motorcycle Club's annual 300 mile road race held at Savannah, Ga., yesterday. Motor trouble, when the oil line of his single cylinder Norton machine plugged and caused spark trouble, was the reason given for Pepper's inability to finish first.



Pepper, according to press dispatches from Savannah direct to the Ontario Intelligencer, rode a marvellous race, leading the entire field of the 71 riders until there were but ten laps left to cover. At this point the oil line became affected and resulted in his having to stop for minor repairs, during which he lost considerable distance and the leadership. Upon his resuming of the race after the oil trouble had been adjusted, Pepper continued to gain ground on the leaders, but as the track is only 1 1-2 miles in circumference, the 40 odd miles left in the race, proved Motorcycle Club of America.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

A few years ago the cry in Belleville was "it's too cold and there are too many drafts at the old arena, that's why we won't attend hockey games." Invalided local hockey lovers.

To-day, however, Belleville has an up-to-date arena with ample and comfortable seating capacity, so there should be no reason for not patronizing the game locally. Later the cry went up—"aw, we ain't got a team to follow." Well both of the above complaints can be disposed of with now as Belleville has a fine arena and Manager Eddie Thomas has garnered together two good teams of pickaters that deserve a far better patronage than they have been afforded. The fans should take into consideration that it's fun crowd that makes the game, regardless as to whether it's hockey, baseball or what-not. There seems to be an air of optimism where the players are concerned and that atmosphere created by capacity houses is soon absorbed by the players, with the result that a better brand of hockey is played before a full house than is the case when only a meagre attendance is on hand.

Tonight the Belleville junkers make their debut before the home crowd, Manager Thomas has garnered together the best material available throughout the district and high hopes are entertained by the group and bringing local hockey honors to Belleville in 1936. "Does history repeat itself?" we ask. Exactly twenty years ago, in 1916, Belleville defended the season with two great hockey teams. The local juniors and seniors, under the direction of the late Richard "Dick" Arnott went to the semi-finals in their respective groups while the intermediates were noised out in the finals for the provincial title. Nuff sed regarding that incident, but as we remember it the two local teams that year did not start off so well. As a matter of fact both the juniors and intermediates lost their first few games, as did the present-day squads. Once they got under way, however, nothing in these parts could touch 'em, so let's hope that history will repeat itself and 1936 will see another banner year in Belleville hockey circles. With R.M.C. dropping from the senior series, it leaves Gananoque, Queen's, Kingston and Belleville in the race. The Gananoque outfit makes its only appearance of the season tonight at the arena and a splendid game of hockey is assured. The local red-clad jumpers worked out over the week-end and are reported to be ready for the invasion from the east. A win tonight will elevate the "Redmen" into second position in the group standing.

During the progress of Friday night's Peterboro at Belleville intermediate game Referee Joe Smith was forced to impose no less than fifteen penalties, of which Belleville drew down nine trips to the fence. Just why players persist in drawing down penalties for petty infractions of the rules and thereby jeopardizing the chances of their team is a deep dark mystery. There may be some advantage to trip an opposing player and save a goal when he's inside the defence and about to shoot on net. Such a penalty might save a goal, but to bump opposing players into the fence and slash and cut when no advantage can be gained is purely foolishness, as the offenders always draw down penalties and force their team to work under the handicap of short-handedness and naturally gives the opposition an opportunity to stage ganging attacks that always prove dangerous.

Coach Eddie Schrieder's St. Michael's cagers opened the senior interscholastic basketball group with a victory over the Albert College scholastic last Friday, but the "Irish" face a real acid test when they back up against the sturdy B.C.I.V.S. seniors next Friday night at which time the Picton High seniors clash with Coach Beach's Albert seniors also. Not until a week later do Coach George Laughlin's junior and senior hoopsters swing into action at one time. In the meantime the R.M.C. intermediate B.C.O.B.A. squad make their initial appearance of the season locally and versus the Belleville "Y" team on Thursday night.

Last Wednesday night senior interscholastic hockey was introduced to Belleville hockey lovers and at one stage a bit, in the afternoon of this week the same four teams stage another melee but in the senior loop and furthermore from the amount of interest being registered at the first senior game of the days can look for plenty of second when Interscholastic pucksters swing into action this week. Last week both games were very closely contested as the teams proved to be quite evenly matched. Wednesday night's schedule brings together Albert College versus the O.S.D. in the first fixture while the B.C.I.V.S. tackle the green-leading St. Michael's scribes. Two sterling games can be assured and a good brand of hockey dished up.

	W.	L.	T.	P.	A.	P.
St. Michael's	1	0	0	2	1	2
Albert College	1	0	0	2	0	2
B.C.I.V.S.	0	0	1	1	1	1
O.S.D.	0	1	0	0	2	0

Although tonight's junior O.H.A. game is most prominent in local fans' minds, for those interested in the minor wrestling amateur bracketing, three bouts of each line of the ring pastime will be presented at the Trenton airport this evening with all local talent taking part.

The Brockville Magedomas suffered their first defeat in the Ottawa City League senior group on Saturday night when the R.C.A.F. senior city Ottawa blanked the Magedomas out to the tune of 2 to 0. The Magedomas had been rounding quite a swath in the Ottawa loop and were headed for a fall. It was their initial defeat of the season.

As exclusive story wired to the Ontario Intelligencer by Cecil Hoge of the staff, informs us of George Pepper's tough break in the American Motorcycle race held yesterday at Savannah, Ga. Pepper finished fifth after leading the parade practically throughout, until his oil line plugged with only ten laps to go. Pepper rode, a marvelous race, the dispatch states.

Dale Plays The Game

—BY—

Ann Forester

As the last minute lunched by the despair in Dale's brown eyes, he spoke to the manager and got up a small part in the chorus. It was an invisible move. Dale Evans became the favorite object of the Delorme spite. And because Lila Delorme still held power in some theatrical offices, Dale always sided with her against his royal little sweetheart. So it had gone the night of broken romances until it had reached this night when Dale walked alone through Coli City, her head held high and a strange new ache in her heart.

Forty arc-lighted blocks formed Coli City's theatre district. The asphalt was still warm from the heat of the day. Dale's sharp spiked heels sank in it as she crossed at street corners.

Main Street stretched away, stark and ugly even in the softening darkness. The two-storey brick buildings were unadorned by any pleasant grocery, for water was too precious in this desert town to be wasted on such unprofitable frivolity as trees and vines.

How many such small towns she had viewed from the outside, thought Dale. One night—it seemed since the time she had played "Willie Carter's Last Leave" or a Uncle's yellow-headed "Eva" in a Tom show. How she was going to get out one from the inside. Tomorrow she would be looking for work here. Now this she had a chance to think it over coolly she found a small new bed in her heart. What could she do in a little town—she, Dale Evans, who had been on the stage all her short life? She had chosen, largely to Lil about staying and getting work here. But Lil was among people she knew only the life of the stage. The rest of the world was "outside"—a strange new sphere whose habitants and rules she did not know.

The corner drug store parted up her spirits. Once—in a slow season in San Francisco, she had demonstrated cold cream in a drug store. Perhaps she could do that here. Surely women in Cold City used cold cream and powder. She'd get a job . . . she'd make good away from the stage . . . away from Lila Delorme's malicious triumph and from Phil's false love-making.

Dale was passing a saloon with an ostentatious display of fruit apiece in its front window. A group of men wearing uniform of the old town high laced boots, khaki trousers and shirts with rolled-up sleeves and open necks showed skin burned nearly sepia by the desert sun—lounged over the cigar counter watching her.

She was used to men's eyes, was Dale Evans. Used to having appraising masculine eyes stare over her slender figure and shapely silk legs. Now, though a faint pink rose under her rouge gave no sign that she saw the frowning nudger or heard the remark about "the actorine" as she went by.

An all night oyster grotto on her right, where a bectilly flushed lobster reposed on a bed of wilted lettuce and returned her stare with staring beady eyes. That brought memories of Lil Rossi—pictured in the quiet little hippers after the show. Herself perched on a high stool with her heels hooked over the rung. Phil's handsome laughing face close to hers . . . laughing . . . murmuring little love names . . . Oh, Phil . . . . Phil

The lightness of the cheap hotel struck her anew as she entered. Worn linoleum and matting brass napkins. The rear leather chairs where travelling men lounged and talked together in stealthy voices broken by sudden violent bursts of laughter.

She heard their talk cease as she entered. Felt their too obvious admiration as she passed toward the staircase which led to the upper floor. The night clerk—a sallow-faced youth with lacquered hair and bold eyes, lounged behind the cigar case. Dale had snubbed him for his familiarity that afternoon. She caught his unsightly leer now as she went up the stairs.

The girl's head was high. Her body straight and proud. No one watching her slender back ascending the stairs would guess that her heart was heavy and her eyes burned with tears.

CHAPTER 4

Dale woke to a sense of trouble. Memory was upon her before she opened her eyes. Lil was up and dressing—Dale could hear her struggling into her corset; wheezing as she bent to fasten the garment. Then now and then she felt that Lil's frown—gaze rested on her own motionless figure. Dale resolutely kept her eyes closed. She was weary of arguments . . . sick of thinking . . . She lay still, pretending to sleep, hoping Lil would leave without speaking to her.

But when she had pulled her black kimono—colored hat over her bemused bob, Lil lowered her big body to the edge of the bed and laid a plump hand on the girl's shoulder.

"Honey"—she said softly, "Changed your mind about leaving the show?

Dale regarded her with serious brown eyes. She shook her rumpled yellow head. "No, Lil, I'm going to stick here.

"I think you're crazy!" said the old trouper explosively. "You get up and come along with me, Dale. We'll get a room together. We'll work up a song an' dance act. You playing it straight; I'll be the brash fly goby. Dale—that's a lunch! Maybe we'll be a riot—like the Duncan Sisters. We'll have our names in bigger letters 'n Kate Janis'!"

A weak smile touched Dale's lips. The wild and always green hope of Lil. Something about Dale Evans, more than mere prettiness. Something . . . Lil searched her meagre vocabulary to express the thought roused in her . . . something of Dale that didn't ilke the run of chorus girls she'd met. Maybe Lil was right to leave the boards. After all, the stage hadn't used herself any too well, reflected Lil De Voe. If she'd had sense she'd've quit too when she was Dale Evan's age. Settled down, get over this business about Phil Clifford. She'd meet some good man. Marry—settle down and have a home. It was a wise thing to do. Afterall, reflected the old barnstormer philosophically, for every Lillian Russell there are a thousand Manner—WJZ

TARZAN THE INVINCIBLE

Zora Drinov did not scream. She only closed her eyes and waited. She felt herself lifted from the ground, and a moment later the elephant had crossed the little clearing and deposited her in her shelter. Then he backed off slowly and resumed his post of duty.

His hair had not hurt her. A mother could not have lifted her baby more gently, but he had impressed upon Zora that she was a prisoner and that he was her keeper. Tantor was fully carrying out Tarzan's instructions to prevent her from wandering in the jungle.

Though Zora realized that her fears were groundless, she decided that she would take no more liberties with her mighty warden. She took long walks after that, Tarzan was always with her, but Tantor, and the great beast turned and lumbered off into the forest.

The Tarzan advanced to where Zora sat in the opening of her shelter. Lightly he lifted her from the ground and kissed her to his shoulder, and then to her infinite surprise at his strength and agility, swung into a tree and started off through the jungle.

Phil would be there, trim and immaculate as usual. Phil—Oh Phil!—He couldn't go like this! Without a word—

Then the tears stinging Dale's eyes were checked. A hand on the door knob. The door opened. But it was only a middle-aged chamber maid.

"Oh, 'scuse me, Miss—" the woman's eyes looked round curiously at the girl. "I thought everyone was out."

"You can come in. I—I was just going out for breakfast." Dale rose and pulled down the brim of her small white felt hat to hide her eyes.

"Maybe you're right, kid," she said soberly as she heaved herself to her feet. "Maybe you're right at that. She picked up her suitcase. "Well, the latchstring is always out wherever I am. If things get too tough come on up an' join me. We can at least go to the poor farm together."

A pat on Dale's shoulder and Lil was gone, clicking heavily out of the room on her stilted heels.

Left alone in the room Dale felt a forlorn chill creeping around her heart. She would miss Lil. She had been kind to the lonely girl, had hard-boiled, soft-hearted Lil De Voe.

Dale wondered if she would ever lay eyes on the old trouper again. But not to her wildest fancy did she ever guess in what astonishing surroundings, under what startling circumstances her next meeting with Lil would take place.

Long moments Dale lay there, her mind busy with sober thoughts, her eyes absently fastened on a sunbeam slanting in through the low drawn shade.

In spite of the early hour the heat was already oppressive. Sleep was impossible. She could hear an awning creak as it was lowered over the entrance of the hotel under her window. Funds rattled into town and drew up to the curb with squeaking brakes. Far away a rooster crowed—a sound somehow forlorn—a dog barked. Someone going by in a machine hailed someone going by on the pavement.

Senseless panic suddenly seized the girl. She flung back the light covers and leaped from bed. Was she crazy to be lying here while the rest of the company was leaving? Why—she must have been mad! If she hurried she could catch them before they left.

Dale dress'd hurriedly, slapping her powder puff at her face, smearing her lip rouge on with fingers that trembled.

She was dressed, sitting on the edge of the tumbled bed—waiting. How her heart was pounding—she didn't know why. A footstep in the hall and her heart leaped. But it went on down the hall. Then Dale stared and jumped until the rigidmatic old bed creaked. Down by the station—the whistle of the early train.

As though she were there, Dale could see the departure of the stage company. The curious group of town folk gathered to see show people leave. The "wise cracks" from the group of village wits, always in evidence. Lil's hard blue eyes would go over them. She would sniff and remark loudly about "fresh yaps!"

Marmora and District

Marmora (Special)—The annual banquet and meeting of the Deloro Safety Committee was held on Thursday evening. A sumptuous repast was served in the staff dining room by Mrs. Percy Smith and her helpers. This dainty meal provided through the generosity of the Deloro Smelting and Refining Co. Those present accorded Mr. Wright and management a vote of thanks and they also expressed their sympathy to Mrs. Smith's bereavement.

The meeting then adjourned to the Deloro Hall where with the regular monthly meeting and the annual meeting was held. After the roll call short addresses and reports were made by the following speakers: G. Brooks gave the report of the "Suggestions Committee"; C. F. Nicholson reported on the "Competitive" committee; C. H. Bustard brought in the report on the "Inspection" committee; J. A. Rice gave a report of the "Frone Method" practices; W. R. Reynolds reported on the work of the Publicity Committee.

Accident Charts

The eleventh annual meeting commenced with the reading and confirmation of minutes of the last annual meeting. Chairman S. A. Elliott read his report, remarking that the question of most importance was how to preserve the good record of the year 1938. He then explained two charts which were displayed on opposite walls. The first was "Lost days per year which came under compensation and the second chart was named "Compensated accidents per year."

Mr. Elliott then compared the figures of the last year with those of the years since the company had operated. He continued: "We realize that now, employees should be thoroughly schooled in the art of accident prevention. Mr. Elliott continued "As mentioned last year we are making a change in this, this year. One foreman is to be sent with the operating staff. The foreman who is eligible with the best no-accident record is Norman Kilpatrick. From the operating staff Mr. C. H. Bustard will join him." Mr. Elliott then mentioned the loss sustained during the year of two original members, J. R. Hempstead and R. D. Murray, the former having moved from the district and the latter recently having passed away at Belleville.

Election of Officers

The election of officers ensued, practically being a re-election of last year's officers. The officers are as follows—Chairman R. A. Elliott; Vice Chairman, W. L. Rigg; Secretary Treasurer, F. Paquet. The following were appointed on the sub-committee—Suggestions, J. Judge, G. Brooks, N. A. Kilpatrick, M. McCoy, W. Simmons; Competitive—H. A. McNally, C. T. Nicholson, W. Mcnally, J. Benoit, H. Cowdy; Inspection—C. H. Bustard, W. L. Rigg, W. M. Regan, H. Smith, A. Mackenzie. Publicity—W. R. Reynolds, D. Robertson, W. L. Rigg, F. Gray, A. V. Yates.

H. A. McNally and H. Rennie were re-elected as auditors. R. A. Elliott, retiring member of Trenton Relief Board was re-elected for three years. S. R. Wright, general manager of the company was called upon by the chairman to speak. He congratulated the chairman and secretary for the fine reports they had given. He assured the committee that the company was ready to continue their support to the work which had been followed up so energetically.

Gives Travelogue

W. L. Rigg, new vice chairman followed with an interesting talk on a trip which he and a companion made from England to Albany, Australia. His talk included interesting word-pictures of Gibraltar, Naples, Port Said, Colombo and other ports visited enroute. He also expressed hearty vote of thanks for having given such an enhancing travelogue.

TORNADOES SWEEP WESTERN STATES

All Airports Closed and Machines Grounded; Highways Blocked

Chicago, Jan. 30—(CP)—Torrential sweep three southeastern States while blizzards dashed the northern tier of states from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic coast, as the United States today counted at least 21 dead, including 16 in traffic accidents.

The majority of the reported automobile fatalities were chargeable to slippery streets and obscured vision of drivers.

Many airports were closed and planes grounded. Railroads ran far behind schedule. In many cities plowers were blocked by snow and automobile traffic virtually was halted. Most main highways were reported open to traffic but, few secondary roads were passable in the midwest.

Heavy snows and rain in some southern states brought a new menace from floods and rivers and streams rose sharply.

Steamer Aground

The S. S. City of Camden went aground near Pennsgrove, N.S., but the 70 passengers were brought ashore safely. Another steamer, the S. S. Ipswitch, reported aground near Panama City, Fla. was reported still in no immediate danger.

A barge sank in New York harbor and three fishing boats were reported missing from Tampico, Mexico. Eleven men were reported missing and believed drowned on a fishing tug near Kenosha, Wis. and three other fishermen refused to leave their tug near the Soo in Michigan.

Property damage was reported at more than $1,000,000 from tornado, freezing and fires.

In addition to those reported missing in ships searching parties were out for an aviator unreported in Wyoming and for a child in Massachusetts. In New Jersey an automobile carrying six youths plunged into a river when the driver was blinded by snow.

Tornadoes claimed 18 lives in Florida, Georgia and Alabama; six persons were frozen to death; seven died from over-exertion; three were burned to death; two died from carbon monoxide fumes; and 19 others from unreported causes.

News is Sent Out From Little Village

Dersingham, England Jan. 30—(AP)—Keeping the world informed of the King's condition has brought to this little village of 500 persons, situated in the countryside a half mile from the main gate of Sandringham House the biggest boom it ever could have hoped to enjoy.

Sleepy-eyed servants in its two combination public houses and inns rush about trying to serve more customers than they ever had to wait on in a full year.

With five beds for hire in one of the inns, 30 newspapermen and almost as many photographers have moved since the King became seriously ill last Friday and have set up headquarters, taking turns at the house's one telephone.

The local telephone exchange with two trunk lines over the 100 miles to London, is swamped with calls. Linemen are working to run in a single telegraph wire—the first the village ever had.

EMPIRE MOURNS THE KING

Vast Empire and Rest of World Share Grief of British Royal Family As Death Closes Career of Monarch

In Presence of Family King-Emperor Passes Peacefully in Sleep at Sandringham House in Norfolk

OVER QUARTER CENTURY REIGN CLOSED

Heart Weakness After Illness of Few Days Claims King George Fifth—Announcement of Impending End Prepared World For News

By CHARLES P. NUTTER

Copyright, 1936, By The Associated Press

Sandringham, England, Jan. 21.—(AP)—The tranquil death of King George V plunged Great Britain's Royal family into mourning today, with the vast empire and the rest of the world sharing its grief for the beloved, 70-year old monarch.

His eldest son, the Prince of Wales, automatically succeeded to the throne, with the formal proclamation declared to be held until he could receive the oaths of allegiance from the Privy Council at London.

FAMILY AT BEDSIDE

The venerable sovereign died, just as he had always wished, in the quiet of his Norfolk country estate, with the family he loved so well at his bedside.

Four days after he contracted a sudden illness, His Majesty succumbed at 11.55 o'clock (6:55 p.m. E.S.T.) last night to complications arising from a severe cold, bronchial catarrh and a heart weakness—a burden too heavy for the frail form to bear.

Steeling themselves for the double ordeal of burying the King and proclaiming the new sovereign, Queen Mary and her children wept and prayed over King George's bier as the empire of 450,000,000 subjects waited to do him homage. . . . . .

PRINCE HASTENS TO LONDON

After comforting his mother, Queen Mary, in their hour of grief, the 41 year old Prince of Wales conferred with court officials this morning before hastening to London to be acclaimed King Edward VIII.

Respecting their privacy, the saddened subjects and neighbors of the bereaved family left them to their sorrow.

From high and low, from all parts of the earth, came messages of condolence. Broadcasts were discontinued, and London crowds were hushed.

The court decided to transfer His Majesty's body to St. Mary of Magdalene's Church here late in the day to rest temporarily before the altar, as did the bodies of his mother, Queen Alexandra, his brother, the Duke of Clarence and Avondale, and his youngest son, John.

Connected By Footpath.

The church, only 600 yards from Sandringham House, is connected with the royal residence by the footpath over which the late King George and Queen walked on their way to and from worship.

The youngest son of King George and Queen Mary is buried in the churchyard, from which the Royal standard, at half-staff, whipped in a cold January wind.

The new king conferred with his brothers and court officials concerning funeral arrangements. The Body of the late monarch will be removed privately to London, to lie in state, probably in Westminster Hall.

Interment will take place at Windsor, just west of London on the Thames, and seat of one of the traditional royal residences.

King George probably will go to his last resting place in a vault beside the bodies of his father, King Edward VII, Charles I and Henry VIII.

Neighbor-Subjects Mourn.

Here in Norfolk, near the bleak coast 100 miles northeast of London, the neighbor-subjects mourned the passing of the country squire, gentleman, churchgoer and family man they had known for years.

Everywhere in the Empire, it was King George's devotion to duty, which inspired the British people through the long, dreary days of their greatest war and subsequent depression, which was sorely missed in these days of international tenseness.

The Sovereign, declining gradually for days, passed on to a peaceful and unconscious end in the last moments. Just before midnight, physicians summoned the family to His Majesty's side. The Archbishop of Canterbury, long a friend of the King, gave a benediction.

In the great white chamber, overlooking the Norfolk countryside, were Queen Mary, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, the Duke and Duchess of Kent, and Princess Mary—the Princess Royal and wife of the Earl of Harewood.

The King's third son, the Duke of Gloucester, was absent. A severe cold kept him in Buckingham Palace in London.

Queen Breaks Down.

Queen Mary, whose sturdy self-control had kept her calm during her husband's brief illness, broke down only at the last. She wept.

The Prince of Wales, who automatically became King at the moment of his father's death, comforted his mother in that hour of greatest grief, just as he had through the ominous hours immediately preceding the end.

Royal Funeral Tues., Jan. 28 In St. George's

London, Jan. 21 (AP)—The funeral of King George V will be held Tuesday, January 28 in St. George's Chapel of Windsor Castle.

The body will lie in state in Westminster Hall from Thursday until the time of the funeral.

At the present time it is in Sandringham, the place of death.

A full state procession will accompany the late king's body from Westminster Hall to Paddington Station, from where the body will be taken to Windsor.

The body of King George V, after being transferred from Sandringham House to the village church today, will be placed Thursday on a gun carriage and taken to a royal special train for London, where it will lie in state at Westminster Hall.

When the body of the King is removed to the village chapel after dusk tonight the new king and other members of the Royal Family will follow the coffin afoot from Sandringham House to Wolferton Station, two-and-one-half miles away.

A special train will leave there for London at noon Thursday.

It is possible the widowed Queen Mother Mary may walk part of the way.

The late king's own company of the Fifth Territorial Battalion of the Royal Norfolk Regiment will serve as a guard of honor. A group of Grenadier Guards will act as pall bearers.

Beyond these units, there will be no military ceremony.

Body Removed to Church.

Sandringham, Jan. 21.—The body of King George V was started tonight on the slow journey which, during the next few days, will permit thousands of his former subjects to view the face of the dead sovereign for the last time.

The body was removed from Sandringham House, where the king died at 11:55 p.m. yesterday, to the little parish church.

The new sovereign already, had gone by airplane to London to take up the responsibilities imposed by his father.

The body of King George, in a coffin, was taken on a hand bier escorted by a detachment of Grenadier Guards from the house and rain.

Pipes Play Lament.

The king's piper played a wailing lament as the procession moved along the cinder path.

The workmen of the Sandringham estate carried the coffin from the death chamber to place it on the bier. They were dressed in corduroy breeches and leather jackets. The workmen themselves mounted guard over the body to stay there all through the night.

The widowed Queen Mary and her children, waiting for the new King Edward and the Dukes of York and Gloucester, left the house to await the arrival of the body on the church court.

The parish rector conducted a short service, after which the family returned to Sandringham House for the night.

Simple Oak Coffin Will Hold Body

Sandringham, Eng., Jan. 21 (AP) —The late King George will be buried in a simple oak coffin carefully fashioned in the workshops of the Royal estate by men who served the dead Sovereign for years.

The wood used for the coffin is from trees felled on the Sandringham grounds several years ago.

Sad Message is Sent by New King

London, Jan. 21 (AP)—The Prince of Wales will assume the title of King Edward VIII, it was indicated today.

He thus signed a message he sent the Lord Mayor of London shortly after his father's death.

The new monarch sent this message to the Lord Mayor:

"I am deeply grieved to inform you that my beloved father, the King, passed away peacefully at 11.55 tonight.

(Signed) Edward."

FLAGS IN NORWAY FLY AT HALF-STAFF

Oslo, Norway, Jan. 21 (AP)—Queen Maud now is the only surviving child of King Edward VII, owing to the death of her brother, King George V.

Queen Maud 66 years old, married King Haakon of Norway in 1896.

All flags in Norway were lowered to half-staff and the Norwegian government telegraphed its sympathy to Great Britain.

NINE MONTHS OF MOURNING

First Public Command Issued by New King Directs Mourning

London, Jan. 21. (AP)—Edward VIII issued his first public command as king shortly after he received from Sandringham to London by airplane today, calling on the court to observe nine months' mourning for his father, King George V.

The following notice was posted outside Buckingham Palace:

"The king commands that the court shall wear mourning for nine months from this day for His Late Most Gracious Majesty, King George V, of blessed memory. This court is to change to half mourning on Tuesday, July 21st, next."

King Edward arrived at Hendon airdrome at 12.15 p.m., (7.15 a.m. E.S.T.), accompanied by the Duke of York after a swift 35-minute flight from Bircham Newton, near Sandringham.

A huge crowd had gathered to see their new king on his first visit as sovereign to the capital.

They saw his graceful red airplane glitter in the morning sun as it came roaring out of the northeast, circle wide over the airdrome, then slip swiftly down in a perfect three-point landing.

Thousands silently lined the streets as the king drove to St. James Palace.

Final Obsequies Will Take Place at St. George's Chapel

JANUARY DIRE MONTH

Late King Welcomed Hon. Vincent Massey to London

BY THOMAS T. CHAMPION

Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 21 (C.P. Cable) — It is highly probable that King George will lie in state at Westminster Hall, that wonderful chamber with a cedar roof where Guy Fawkes, King Charles I and Warren Hastings stood trial.

Great feasts were held at Westminster Hall at every coronation from that of King Stephen in 1135 to that of George IV. in 1820. At these the King's Champion, clad in armor, rode into the hall and threw down his gauntlet, challenging to combat anyone disputing the right of the sovereign to accession.

Here also Gladstone lay in state in 1898, as did King Edward VII. from May 17 to 19, 1910, and the victims of the R-101 airship disaster in 1930. Half a million people passed the bier of King Edward.

Garden at St. George's Chapel

Final obsequies of King George, as of those of his predecessor, will be held at St. George's Chapel, Windsor.

It is of interest to recall that the last four British sovereigns have died at different royal residences. King William IV. died at Windsor in 1837. Queen Victoria died at Osborn House, Isle of Wight, in 1901. King Edward died at Buckingham Palace in 1910 a few days after his return from Windsor to London.

A charming and moreover perfectly authentic story relates how the news of her uncle's death was caught by the young Victoria, heir to the throne, in 1837. Doctor Howley, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Marquess of Conyngham, the Lord Chamberlain, started from Windsor post-haste in a four-horse tandam in the early hours of a lovely June morning to tell the girl princess, living secludedly at Kensington Palace with her mother, the Duchess of Kent, of the death of William IV, which raised her to the throne.

Sleep Had to Wait

When they reached the silent palace, a maid-servant told the tragic messengers that the princess was enjoying such a peaceful sleep she could not be disturbed. However, naturally, when she realized that to their bustings even peaceful sleep must give way.

Wearing merely a wrapper or a dressing gown, and a shawl over her shoulders the 18 year old princess appeared. Having told their momentous news, the messengers kissed hands. The young queen held her first council in perfect composure a few hours later.

Sixty-four years later, in January 1901, at the close of a reign longer than that of any other British sovereign, Queen Victoria's Archbishop Davidson, then Bishop of Winchester and now Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, stood by the dying queen's bedside.

Like Lord Archbishop Davidson, extracts from which were only recently published, described the death of King Edward. "For more than an hour I remained there, saying what I could at intervals," he wrote. "Gradually the end grew greater and the end was evidently come, I said the commendatory prayer and a few moments after he simply ceased to breathe. I have seldom seen a calmer passing."

Two Die at Sandringham

Only two other members of the Royal Family have died at Sandringham. Prince Albert Victor, later called the Duke of Clarence, elder brother of King George, who would have succeeded to the throne himself, died there in January, 1892, aged 28. Queen John, youngest son of King George and Queen Mary, who was never robust, died at Sandringham in January, 1919, aged 14.

It was in January also that Queen Victoria died. The first month of the year seems to have a dim significance for British Royalty.

King George's last office on behalf of Canada was on November 26 last, when he received in audi-

COURT NO. 32 I.O.O.F.

The annual installation of officers of Court Moira, No. 32, of the Independent Order of Foresters, was held in the auditorium of the C.O.F. Robertson Block last night, with a good attendance of interested members. The chief installing officer was Robert C. Douglas of Ottawa, Past High Chief Ranger of the High Court of Eastern Ontario. The following officers were installed in the various positions:

Court Deputy—Bro. Geo. Sprack sr.

Chief Ranger—Bro. F. Miller.
Vice-Chief Ranger—Bro. G. E. Lally.
Rec. Sec. and Treas.—Bro. G. G. Finkle.
Fin. Secy.—Bro. C. L. Walters.
Orator—Bro. W. Tweed.
Organist—Comp. E. Clarke.
Sr. Woodward—Bro. Wm. Kennedy.
Jr. Woodward—Bro. C. G. Shorey.
Sr. Beadle—Bro. J. Gadley.
Jr. Beadle—Bro. J. Christie.
Comps. Beatty and Jean Shorey very pleasingly rendered the duties of Marshal and Conductor during the ceremony and afterwards contributed most efficiently to the program. After the formal proceedings were over and the tables set, both vocal and instrumental. The address of the chief installing officer, Bro. Douglas, was eloquent and inspiring. He referred in appropriate terms to the great loss sustained by the nation and the empire because of the death of their beloved monarch. He also spoke feelingly of the personal friendships he had formed among the brethren of Belleville. These had increased by reason of his many valuable possessions. He then gave a brief outline the beneficient enterprises carried out by the Independent Order, as well as the noble humanitarian effort entirely aside from the payment of nearly than one-hundred million dollars to the families of deceased members.

Bros. Chas. Shorey and Chas. Walters followed with brief addresses.

Following the court meeting the members repaired to the banquet room where Bro. Douglas acted as chairman. Owing to the death of the King, the after-dinner program was cancelled.

POLICE BLOTTER

Two young girls, one a resident of Trenton and the other a resident in Thurlow, were apprehended on the East Dundas Street by Constables Arnott and Evans at an early hour this morning. The girls were unable to give a good account of themselves for wandering at large at such an hour, and were arrested on charges of vagrancy. In today's local police court the girls were remanded in custody until Friday by Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C. The charge read was that of vagrancy.

A motor car accident that happened on Front Street, opposite the upper bridge yesterday, resulted in a damaged radiator and fenders when a motor car collided with a parked car. The extent condition of the pavement was attributed the paramount cause of the accident.

The smallest number of transients to be given sleeping quarters at the police station thus far this year was in evidence last night when only three weary travellers appeared at the night sergeant's desk. All were liberated this morning and informed to 'move along'.

Motor accidents in this city were at a low ebb during the past 24 hours, none being reported by the motorcycle officers on charter.

ALERTNESS OF YOUTHS HELP

Edward Lowe Runs Foul of Law After a Break-in

Alertness on the part of two local youths resulted in the arrest of Edward Lowe, Belleville, on a charge of breaking, entering and theft from Klein's grocery. Lowe appeared in Police Magistrate E. J. Butler's today, and was remanded in custody until Friday.

While returning home about midnight last night, two unidentified youths saw a man step into the south doorway of Klein' grocery and break the window of the door, later reaching inside and unlocking the door from that side. The youths then disappeared into the building and the two youths immediately notified the police authorities. Constable Evans and Arnott were dispatched to the scene by motor cruiser, but apparently the burglar had escaped through a rear door in the building. However, as the two boys stated they had kept a vigil outside the front door and no person had emerged at that point. The two youths gave the police a full description of the man to enter the building with the result that Lowe was later apprehended in a nearby store.

When taken to the police station for questioning Lowe was found to be in possession of $1.30 in cash and a portion of a bottle of rubbing alcohol. Subsequently Lowe's Bond Street Booth brought forward a third eye-witness to the breaking and entering. The evidence in the case will be submitted during Lowe's trial on Friday, minutes being accepted in today's court.

Scholars Mourn King's Death, Tribute Paid to Royal Life

Plans Are Underway For City Wide School Memorial Service

Period of silence and deep meditation, marked school sessions throughout Belleville this morning in solemn recognition of the death of His Majesty King George the Fifth. Pupils stood with bowed heads.

At the Belleville Collegiate and Vocational School, the morning exercises were reduced at the request of Principal R. O. Reid, and while during the singing of 'God Save the King, the flag was dipped in reverence. Mr. J. N. Findlay, secretary of the Board of Education, stated that no ruling had been suggested by the Board as regards suitable arrangements for city-wide school observance would be made by the Board as soon as the proclamation pertaining to the date of the funeral of His Majesty was announced.

At Queen Alexandra School period of silence was observed in the assembly hall this morning, all pupils taking part in the solemn service. The usual morning exercises of singing and music were dispensed with while Principal Anderson gave a short address on the life and work of His Majesty. The pupils then marched quietly to their respective class rooms.

At Queen Mary School the observance was held in each individual room, there being no assembly hall in that school, Principal Fraser stated. The announcement of His Majesty's death was followed by the singing of the National Anthem for the new King Edward VIII. Periods of silence were observed.

At Queen Victoria School, Principal Whitin ran the school flag up at half-staff while prayers were observed and a two minute silence marked prior to opening of the classes.

At King George School, Principal Kells assembled the entire school and staff in the auditorium and announced the death of His Majesty, after the singing of the National Anthem each teacher spoke at length relative to the passing of the King in their respective classes.

At St. Michael's Academy this morning a fitting reference was made to the splendid qualities and exemplary life of the late King. Tribute was paid to his many qualities as ruler and to his influence for good, all the history periods were used in eulogizing the life of the King. The flag was at half staff.

Prior to the illness of Rev. Principal Howard, principal of Albert College, and Rev. Father Cassidy, observatex at that school was conducted by one of the Masters, Mr. Williamson, Grade 12 boy, during which Elvin's grocery. Lowe appeared in Police Magistrate E. J. Butler's today, and was remanded in custody until Friday.

CHAMBER ASKS GRADE BE CUT

States in Letter Change Would be Benefit And Provide Work

A letter was received from the Manager of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Ernest Bateman, at the council respecting a matter taken up by the Chamber in regard to grading. The council ordered the communication referred to the city engineer.

The subject matter of the letter follows and speaks for itself:

"Belleville, Ontario.

"Gentlemen:—

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce held this morning attention was given to the possibility of securing relief for unemployment by reaching the higher level of the King's Highway No. 2 to the west of the city.

It was pointed out that the present route going up Murney's Hill is dangerous, as well as excessively heavy grade of from ten to twelve per cent. Heavily ascending extreme difficulty for all motor vehicles, but especially motor loaded trucks; and all times occasioning hazards to drivers of vehicles, of all kinds as well as causing advantage to residents in that neighborhood in the cooling operation of traffic, particularly during the night hours.

As an alternative route Directors of the Chamber of Commerce suggest that the City Council, through its Public Works and Engineering Committee, make a thorough investigation of the possibility of diverting Dundas Street West by directing it westerly along the base of the cliff commonly known as the Devil's Elbow and joining The King's Highway No. 2 at a point to the east of Dr. Edward's residence, a distance of approximately 900 feet, and where the maximum grade should not exceed five per cent.

It was thought that the rock material that would necessarily be removed could be used for fill on the construction of side-walks, pavements and for the improvement of Public Works and that much of the work could be done by relief labor and the actual construction spread over a considerable period of time.

Trusting that this request will receive your earnest consideration, I am

"Very truly yours,
"J. O. Herity.

KING GEORGE V WAS HERE IN 1901

Belleville Recalls Scenes on Visit of Duke and Duke of York And Duchess

Thirty-four years ago, the late King George V., then Duke of York, accompanied by his Duchess paid a short visit to Belleville. They were returning from a tour of the western provinces and kindly consented to make a short stay in Belleville on October 16, 1901.

Long before the train arrived thousands of people jammed the north station yard and walled patiently for the arrival of the Royal visitors when train was due at nine o'clock in the morning.

Soldiers, staff members of the city choirs, under the direction of Prof. F. H. Torrington, stationed at the west end of the platform of the station, and as the train pulled in sang patriotic songs.

However, due to the loud cheering and general confusion likes of their songs "Rule Britannia" and "The National Anthem, was heard.

The train had arrived in the city a previous night at 11.50 and was then to back it north of the station. In the morning at nine, was brought up to position in the station.

During the night a guard was placed around the train consisting of the following:—C. Jeffers, J. Bell, C. Miller, C. A. Gibson, H. Renfrew, W. Nelson, F. Spriggs, C. Doyle, T. Hyland, W. Bell and F. Lynn.

As the train pulled to a stop, Major Mande stepped off and asked for Mayor Graham. He was followed by the Duke and Duchess, His Worship along with Aldermen Bogart, Thompson, were presented, also W. B. Northrup, M.P., and R. Maitland of the School for the Deaf, then followed Mrs. Sewell who presented a bouquet of flowers to Duchess on behalf of the local branch of the Daughters of the Empire. Miss Flossie Graham, (now Mrs. Jamieson Bond), presented a bouquet to Duke on behalf of the citizens of Belleville.

One of the most interesting incidents of the reception was the delivery of an address of the day by two children of the School for the Deaf, Miss Hazel Grey, also deaf. The Duke and Duchess were greatly impressed by this display of cleverness for they asked a number of particulars about the school and expressed the great est surprise that the little girl could speak so well, especially as she had been born deaf.

Others presented were—Col. Fonton, ex-Mayor Johnson and Sheriff Hope. After a stop of five minutes or so, the train moved away to an and and the Royal visitors boarded the train which immediately began to move out to the strains of "The Maple Leaf Must Save the King", ending one of the pleasantest functions that had occurred in the city up to that time.

LARGE NUMBER ATTEND RALLY

Service Opened by "Dead March in Saul" in Respect of King

On Monday night a large crowd gathered in the local S.A. Hall to attend the annual rally, at which all the Corps Officers from the Eastern Part of the Toronto East Division were present, including the following Corps: Picton, Trenton, Campbellford, Napanee, Port Hope, Cobourg, Tweed, Peterborough, and Belleville.

Dead March Played

The service was opened by the playing of "The Dead March in Saul" in respect to our beloved Sovereign, King George V., who passed away during the early hours of Monday evening. The congregation stood as the Band played, after which Ensign Hargrave, the leader of the meeting prayed for the Royal Household in their sad bereavement, and for the new King, Edward.

Representative Officers Speak

Various representative officers spoke representing each of the Corps present and the Peterborough C.O. Arj. Warrinder led the singing that made the rafters ring with melody everyone joining heartily in the same. Among the many speakers during the evening was Mrs. Brigadier Richea, wife of the Divisional Commander, who gave a very pleasing talk on "The Sacrifice of Mankind", and the needs of the present day.

Latest Bands Played

Special selections were rendered during the evening by the Band, and one of the numbers was the famous March entitled "Plymouth No. 2" and was composed by Bandmaster G. Marshall. This "March" was the very latest composition of the press from London, England. The Band was under the direction of Bandmaster David Wards.

Brig. Richea Gives Address

The sermon was preached by Brigadier Richea from Jeremiah, and who in the afternoon conducted a private council with the officers present. He took for his topic "Prayer and What Great Things it Can Do". The Major is a very gifted speaker and his address was appreciated by all present. Capt. W. Brown prayed following the address and Brigadier Richea pronounced the benediction.

Among those present were members from the surrounding Corps, who took much interest in this special gathering.

Guests of Home League

After the Special Council in the afternoon the visiting officers were the guests of the local Home League who prepared a very enticing spread for the officers.

Major and Mrs. Graham thanked the public for attending this gathering and all those that helped to make it a success and extended a welcome to each and everyone to worship at the Army, the organization that is in your service every hour of hours in the day, and who strives to be a friend to all.

KING SAW EMPIRE AS FAMILY OF NATIONS

King George Fifth Will Pass Down in History As Democratic King and Father of His People, Kindly Man Who Exercised Untold Influence

In World of Crashing Systems, British Monarch By His Very Character Was Able to Give Leadership to Empire

King's Gratitude Is Pronounced

Ideal of Britain as Seen by King George Was 'Family of People of Peace and United in Desire to be at Peace'

(Copyright, 1936, by the Canadian Press)

No monarch in the world history was ever closer to his people than King George V. of Great Britain, Ireland, and the British Dominions beyond the sea; and Emperor of India." In no nation or group of nations were mutual respect and affection more manifest.

The Empire-wide celebration in 1935 of the 25th anniversary of the King's accession was a striking evidence of the strong ties binding the throne and the British Commonwealth of Nations. Possibly of even greater token, in retrospect, were the periodical royal messages to the Empire, with their personal touch of affection and their influence simultaneously and alike to the dwller in his castle and the humble settler on the fringes of the Arctic.

Never Forgot Loyalty

Voicing appreciation of the Silver Jubilee demonstrations, the King in his 1935 Christmas message said: "The spontaneous warmth of their loyalty and, may I say, of love, which the Queen and I so much appreciated."

He spoke of the signal respect for the throne and acknowledged the "warm and generous remembrance of the man himself who, may God help! likes to be known as a friend at it."

The King on the same occasion referred to the world's troubles and added: "It is good to think that our own family of people is at peace in itself and united in its desire to be at peace with the rest of the nations—a friend of all and enemy of none."

Perhaps the widest appeal of all to the heart was in the paragraph in which the King referred to his "three Christmases without a son and those of our daughters with our children and my grandchildren, who are to me the greatest joy." Such family gatherings of the Empire in the uttermost parts of the earth—Sandringham, Duke of York, at the age of 36, then had thought to be a bachelor, would succeed the throne. But he succeeded Edward VII. in 1910, at 45, and for 25 years he held the throne through a period of unparalleled world crisis, from which crowns throughout the world were thrown in confusion and their wearers in many instances put to flight, deserted by time-honored allegiance, or even more strongly entrenched than ever as the leader of a great democratic Empire.

A Democratic King

George V. will go down in history as the Democratic King. He was of his family through his long reign close to the people, not only in the seaports, whether at home or across the oceans, at fime and again he gave living evidence of the fitness of the British people and those over whom they owed allegiance to their paternal concern. A simple, kindly man, by very nature and habit, he used his untold influence through times of revolution and war and upheaval, not in all Britain, including revolution—but Britain's revolutions were of a character that only socialists, first coming, to power in 1924, were pursued by fear of him.

As the great Dominions one by one emerged to full self-government, George's prestige as the titular head of his vast Empire became stronger than ever. Dominion Governments, like those of the British Governments often do not see eye-to-eye, but the people of the Dominions yielded nothing to the people of the British Isles in their love for this unassuming monarch. His Majesty himself was ever careful to preserve the constitutional rights of the throne, but of parliament and people, and they honored him the more for it.

Goes Real Leadership

In peace as in war, George was enabled by his innate character to give real leadership to the British people. Before the great conflagration of 1914 he was destined not to stave off the disaster. When it became inevitable he wrote a last, earnest appeal. When it was under way, he never wavered. He took part in the call to cheer on the men in the field and those struggling at home. When the struggle was finally ended by peace, he worked to end the disorders in Ireland. In dispensing honors to those dramatic talks which resulted in formation of the National Government, he recognized the part the United Kingdom back from the edge of the abyss.

And as the Mother Country and her Dominions gradually emerged from that blight which set in in 1930, which brought suffering as great as the Great War itself, His Majesty had scores of his subjects. His happy idea of talks by world-wide wireless to all his people at Christmas time brought the British King nearer to his people than ever he had been before, coupled with his own fine example of service.

Never Spectacular

George V. was never spectacular, one reason he was a beloved monarch. Of quiet, unaffected dignity, the deep regard his peoples had for him, there were many. None was greater than during his serious illness of 1928 when the British Empire united the world wide, waited with breathless sorrow as the King fought his battle back from the very edge of the shadow.

The second son of the late King Edward VII., then Prince of Wales, and the late Princess Alexandra, Princess of Denmark, His Majesty was born at Marlborough House, London, June 3, 1865. The young Prince George in 1892 was created Duke of York, and, by tradition, for some years had been reserved for a younger son of the British monarch.

His was following the calling of the Royal Navy, with which he had devoted himself since he was 13 years old, and which as a full member of the Royal Family he was following when, on the death of his father, the Duke of Clarence, an elder brother, the Duke of Clarence, an elder brother in line of succession to the throne, died suddenly of influenza.

Life was Changed

George saw, in the death of the Duke of Clarence, that his life had been profoundly changed. Clarence had been the idol of his mother Queen Alexandra. Shown with the Prince of Wales, it was impossible for the Duke of York, as he was then, to undertake longer all those duties which had been performed by Clarence, demanded of them and a share fell on George, Duke of York. He, and his wife, who had stood in the second line to the throne, distant from the succession, were called upon to perform the duties and consequently the genial days of his career in the Royal Navy were past. Navy were put behind him. With calm resignation to the decree of Providence and quiet application of his mind, George prepared himself for the duties which were to prove self-discipline.

On the death of his death the Duke of Clarence was engaged to marry Princess Victoria Mary, Duke of Teck, known, for many years to the people as "Princess May." It was the wish of Queen Victoria that the betrothal of Princess May should be to the Duke of York.

It is rather difficult for the present generation, especially over-seas, to realize the sensation the revelation of this popular approbation of Princess May created. She was revered as Queen Victoria was, she was the embodiment of the best in the earlier portion of her reign there was no gainsaying her suitability for German princelings as husbands for daughters of the Royal House of Britain had aroused resentment among the British people. This was changed when the daughter of the Prince of Wales, Edward VII., became betrothed to a prince of with the happiest results they found partners within the British Isles.

Britain Overjoyed

Nevertheless the betrothal of the Duke of York to Princess May was heralded joyfully as a token unmistakable that British princes and princesses of still another generation were to contract British alliances.

Prince George's marriage in the Chapel Royal, St. James Palace, on July 6, 1893, was the occasion of Queen Victoria, by the Emperor who had married Victoria's eldest daughter (Frederick III. of Germany, who died in 1888) was father of the present William Kaiser and by alpe hapless monarch who was fated to be the last Emperor at the hands of the Czars.

Their home, For some years, it is true, they betrayed some diffidence in their public appearances and in acclamation of their future subjects. But record of this constitutes a tribute to their modesty and to the diligence of their duties. It was indeed an onerous task to follow in the wake of the then Prince and Princess of Wales (Edward and Alexandra.) The Prince of Wales was a prominent figure in the nation's efforts for the preservation of peace in Europe. At the time of Edward's accession to the throne more than one continental power was bitterly assailing Britain, and Germany had embarked on her challenge to British sea supremacy. Towards the close of 1901 the Kaiser, apparently without any preliminaries, suggested visiting Britain. Although not a progressive, distasteful to King Edward, who made the counter suggestion that the Prince of Wales should visit Berlin on the occasion of the Kaiser's birthday.

A speech by the Imperial Chancellor to the Reichstag caused King Edward to seriously consider stopping the Prince of Wales' visit altogether. George eventually made a four-day visit to Berlin and there received every mark of honor.

Two years later George visited Vienna with Mary the Princess of Wales, the couple made the journey by sea. Returning they made in 1911, but this time the couple were the King and Queen of Britain and the occasion was the Durbar when George, Emperor of India, announced important changes in the government of India, the chief of these being the removal to the capital from Calcutta to Delhi.

King as Peacemaker

George's last endeavour to follow in the peace of Europe by making personal visit to foreign capitals was in 1913, when he visited Paris on that eventful year of 1914. Accompanied by Queen Mary, he went to Paris to return the visit of Britain by President Poincare in 1913, an exchange intended as a visit to Britain that the Entente Cordiale between the two countries the British ruler with unbounded enthusiasm. Banquets and balls were held at which King George spoke eventually. It was always studiously avoided mention of politics, though at the time the peoples of both countries were keenly aware of the cataclysm overhanging their heads. A memorable visit to the French capital was made after the close of the war when the King attended the first reunion given by the Earl of Derby, who had been appointed Ambassador to France. At this time the King decorated Marshal Foch, Generalissimo of the Allied Armies at the end of the war, the Order of Merit.

George ascended the throne on May 6, 1910. His Majesty and Queen Mary made a journey of West-minster Abbey, June 23, 1911. Representatives from all parts of the Empire and from many foreign countries were present. Visits were made to Ireland, Scotland and Wales were followed by the journey to Delhi where ceremonies of enormous were held in December.

His British subjects was better known to his subjects than George, the first ruler to visit India, and in turn before he succeeded to the throne. all the great overseas Dominions, including Newfoundland as Duke of York in 1901 and again as Prince of Wales in 1905 on the occasion of the Tercentenary.

Part in War

It will be years before anything like a full story can be written of the part King George played during the war. The cannon of Waterloo were heard in the Palace as the British soldiers in what has always been the Palace as the British soldiers with five years of his accession to the throne, the cannon of war second on land and sea.

In those terse days before August 4, 1914, when Russia and Austria were already mobilizing, King George and Queen Mary wrote a last earnest appeal to the Tsar and Tsarina, a personal letter which it was possible for a British King to summon, in the way of civilization. It was a fruitless gesture and within a few days Great Britain was in the throes of mobilization beyond the seas were drawn into the vortex of the world conflict.

On Sunday, November 29, when the war was less than four months old, the King made his first visit to the troops in France and Flanders. It was the Prince of Wales's British monarch had trodden on a battlefield since Cromwell's victory at Bettingen in 1743. One of the first personages the King met was the wife his consort was Princess Mary, daughter of the late Duke of Teck. During the next three days the King saw the Prince of Wales and most of their children were born. Despite the cares of the moment children the Duke and Duchess were seen much together. It was a brilliant, Grand Fleet, but not much was heard of that for the fleet was secreted in the northern fastnesses of Scapa Flow. On June 5, 1915, when on a second visit to the armies in France, His Majesty suffered a breakdown brought on by a royal demonstration of troops who were being inspected, the King's horse reared and fell, his Royal rider falling beneath it. Fortunately His Majesty was severely shaken and bruised and he found it necessary to take to his bed.

Devotion to Wounded

Of the King's devotion in visiting the wounded and sick of his armies and fleets, but brief mention may be made here. There is no record in the journeys he made all over Britain to munition areas where the armies were being supplied and to maintain supplies for the active fighting forces.

At home the King never spared himself in encouraging and supporting by personal example the great common effort. Perhaps his most striking figure in the way of personal example was when on August, 1911, he announced that by the King's command no wines, beers or spirits would be consumed in any of His Majesty's residences after that day. The very next day the order was followed by Lord Kitchener.

Many members of the Parliament, certainly by no means of prohibitionist leaning, openly regretted that the House of Commons itself did not at once follow the King's lead. Nevertheless the unobtrusively assisted materially in securing unanimity of public opinion in favor of the restriction of hours for the sale of intoxicants.

In 1916 the King donated $500,000 to the British Treasury, the gift representing a saving from the privy purse consequent on the cessation of entertainment of foreign royalty and similar high state functions in London. Here again was a fine gesture by the head of the Empire to set his subjects to achieve even the appearance of greater advantage from the troubled times.

House of Windsor

One arresting indication that the old order of things had been swept away was the change in the Royal House as much as for any British house in the days of the Great War. The King announced that the House of Windsor was to be the style and title of the Royal House of England instead of the House of Hanover. Truth to tell, this alteration was not overdue, for the Electors of Hanover, over which a sovereign was also ruler, ceased to be created to be an appanage to the British Crown when Victoria ascended the throne, commanding the name to be changed the King also changed the name of the family of his family who were his subjects from German names to those titles should straightway relinquish them and assume British names and titles.

This necessarily abridged account of the reign of King George would not be complete without a reference to the spiritual leadership, during the night following the declaration of war, the thousands of people gathered before indefinable impulse, gathered around Buckingham Palace. What they had come for they hardly knew but the King and Queen, with their customary readiness to divine the real import of every demonstration by their subjects turned the situation to a simple but significant effect for the world to see. It was the quiet, plain evening dress the King and Queen wore as they appeared on the Palace and for half an hour strolled quietly about among the many thousands. Nobody but those who witnessed it can quite appreciate the significance of that simple display of the common feeling between the throne and the people. Without doubt on account of it was carried to every chancellories.

Armistice Day

And on Armistice Day in 1918, when the guns had ceased, a like impulse again took London myriads to the Palace.

We—we!—King—George! That shrill cry from thousands of throats was repeated again and again. Once more George and Mary came out. In the great years intervening many thrones had been swept away but the throne of British George and Queen remained unshaken and unshakable.

There is encouraging and supporting by personal example the great common effort. Perhaps his most striking figure in the way of personal example was when on August, 1911, he announced that by the King's command no wines, beers or spirits would be consumed in any of His Majesty's residences after that day. The very next day the order was followed by Lord Kitchener.

Many members of the Parliament, certainly by no means of prohibitionist leaning, openly regretted that the House of Commons itself did not at once follow the King's lead. Nevertheless the unobtrusively assisted materially in securing unanimity of public opinion in favor of the restriction of hours for the sale of intoxicants.

In 1916 the King donated $500,000 to the British Treasury, the gift representing a saving from the privy purse consequent on the cessation of entertainment of foreign royalty and similar high state functions in London. Here again was a fine gesture by the head of the Empire to set his subjects to achieve even the appearance of greater advantage from the troubled times.

King George V Visited Canada In Early Days While Duke and Prince

Visits To Dominion Were Epoch - Making Events

SPEECH AT GUILDHALL

His Message to Dominions on His Accession to Throne

His Majesty King George V. made several trips to Canada before he ascended to the throne of Great Britain. His last visit was in 1901 when as the Prince of Wales he attended the tercentenary celebration at Quebec, accompanied by Queen Mary, who was then the Princess of Wales.

Seven years previously, as the Duke of Cornwall and York, the Majesty made a trans-continental trip across the Dominion, the journey being part of an empire tour undertaken in March, 18, 1901 on H.M.S. Ophir.

As early as 1860 invitations came from Australia requesting the Duke and Duchess of York to visit Great Britain's distant dominions.

These invitations were renewed by the governments of New Zealand after Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee in 1897, expressing the wish that the Duchess might visit them at the helm to the throne "in fitting recognition of the hospitality of the British nation, as an evidence of her attachment to the throne and the Royal Family."

In Australia

On September 12, 1900, a proclamation was issued announcing the federation of the Australian States, New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania and West Australia. Simultaneously it was announced that Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, "has been graciously pleased to assent to the Act." Later it was stated that Canada would be included in the tour. The Ophir, one of the Orient company's fine, new steamships, was to be used for the purpose. The elaborate preparations necessary went forward from that date. Captain, later Sir, Frederick, R. N., was appointed to the command of the Ophir. Her cousin, Dalton, C. M. G., C. V. O., formerly tutor to the Duke of Clarence and Prince Christian, was appointed deputy as domestic chaplain.

With the death of Queen Victoria, on January 22, 1901, it became a question as to whether the proposed tour could be carried out. King Edward decided finally that the expressed wishes of her late Majesty should still prevail.

On September 16, 1901, the H.M.S. Ophir with five hundred and fifty souls on board sailed from Portsmouth harbor after a hearty farewell between the dukes and his royal father, Prince of Wales, and the speeches of necessity formal. The words with which the Duke replied to King's address, wishing him Godspeed revealed his sense of the responsibilities which were to be the keynote of his mission.

In Canada

The Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York arrived in Canadian waters on their empire tour on Sept. 16, 1901, when H.M.S. Ophir, flagship met the royal vessel off Cape Breton and escorted her and the duchess the first pave of the assassination of President William McKinley at Buffalo, United States.

The following day the entrance to the St. Lawrence was successfully reached, but a fog delayed their progress for some hours on Sept. 18. Quebec was finally reached at 10 a. m. on the 18th and Lord Minto, governor-general, with Premier Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister, went on board the Ophir to greet the royal visitors.

The Duke and Duchess landed at Quebec on the same wharf, Cape Diamond, where King Edward, then Prince of Wales, landed on Canadian soil in 1860, forty-one years earlier. They received a warm and spontaneous welcome. The streets were crowded with thousands of sightseers who crowded every point of vantage, the fleet of tugs and steamers that met the royal vessel down the river, and the citizens who greeted the duke and duchess as they drove down the street, were evidently full of interest and affection in which the heir-apparent was held, and these sentiments were repeated as the trans-continental tour progressed.

After the address of welcome and replying to them at Quebec, the duke and duchess held short informal receptions was held.

Lord Dufferin, who, although he honored King Edward on his visit in 1860, conferred the honorary degree of doctor of laws upon the duke before leaving Quebec for Montreal by the Grand Trunk railway. Across the dominion, the duke reviewed 5,000 troops on the Plains of Abraham.

Honored at Montreal

In Montreal the more festive features of the reception accorded the duke were eliminated out of respect for the late President McKinley, Proposals to bring a message from the Canadian government to be kept as a day of public mourning. The universities and other educational institutions were visited and the new medical school opened. At McGill University, the duchess was created a doctor of law. At Ottawa there was a fine military display in which the Child died Indian Chief, an veteran stood side by side with the Canadian dragoons in their scarlet splendor.

Their royal highnesses spent a day studying the work of the Parliament and embarked on a "grip" and went down several slides and witnessed an exhibition of log rolling and canoe racing. Continuing their tour with the greatest fortitude, man's meal of port and bones.

Travelling west they visited Ishamable, White River, Port William, Port Arthur, near of course, Winnipeg. On Sept. 26 they reached Calgary, continuing westwards over the Great divide by Vancouver and Victoria.

This brought the westward journey to an end, and turning homewards the royal party reached Toronto on October 16, Fish Hain then descending in torrents, but the station which had been erected where the city was the scene of an enthusiastic demonstration. People, it is said, literally went wild with excitement, and the chair on the steps of the city hall was unable to keep itself heard above the deafening roars. A review of 10,000 troops in Exhibition Park was held, and the duke presented to A. E. O. Cockburn the Victoria Cross, and a event of honor was given by the city. The University was visited in addition to the parliament buildings, while a state reception was held at the government house. Prior to continuing the eastward journey, Niagara, Hamilton and Kingston were visited, Halifax being eventually reached on October 24, and on the 31st the Ophir sailed for home.

Welcome at Guild Hall

On December 8, 1901, at the Guild Hall in London a public welcome was tendered to the Duke and Duchess to which rank His Royal Highness was now elevated. Something to say on that occasion not only descriptive of the journey but also to the world at large that he was no mere figure-head, says the Toronto Globe. During the course of a total of 50,718 miles had been covered, practically all of the small remaining of the Empire had been visited. This tremendous experience had not been undertaken merely as a pleasure trip for the future monarch as to the manner in which the business of the imperial government was conducted. Before the duke's departure he had made rable theory and tackling the Prince gave his impressions of the tour and of the colonies and dependencies in accents that awaited Englishmen of the Empire. The London Standard in a Star calls quotes him as saying, "great bonds of country as yet unrealized by her but making for consolidation, vast expanses of virgin soil ready to receive multitudes of settlers and all this can be entered upon only by a knowledge of the life, liberty, laws, and free institutions, in exchange for overcrowded cities and the struggle for existence, for conscience. But one condition, one only, is made by the new countries, and that is 'send us suitable immigrants'." It was the speech which became famous for the terse phrase "Wake up, England," that was delivered by the Duke of Cornwall the land.

In his mind, "I were asked to specify any particular impressions derived from our journey I should unhesitatingly say that the loyalty of the colonies to the throne and the love they bear it, and it was touching to hear the invariable references to home, even from the lips of those who never had been or were ever likely to be in these islands. And next to that I should were unmistakable evidences of the determination to maintain the integrity and the living membership in the empire, and of power and readiness to bear their due share of the responsibilities of that membership.

Wake Up, England

"To the distinguished representatives of the commercial interests of the empire, whom I have the pleasure of seeing here today," he continued, "I would say a word which alludes to the impression which appeared generally to prevail among their brethren across the seas, that the Old Country was apathetic and if she intends to maintain her old position of pre-eminence in her colonial trade against foreign competitors."

The speech bore the earmarks of personal authorship. The Toronto Star continued, and was delivered with a sincerity and energy of conviction that could not have been prepared beforehand. The duke asked for himself the youthful enthusiasm of his hearers, and the cheers and had found it contagious but it was his ability to transform this inspiration into practical action that was the chief characteristic of his imperial lesson that proved for all time his sagacity and discriminating observation and his genius for things political.

During his last visit to Canada in 1908, he reviewed Canadian troops on the Plains of Abraham, scene of Abraham. A ceremony of handing to Lord Grey, then governor-general, a sum of money publicly subscribed, for the purchase of the historic battleground and its preservation as a national possession and memorial, was performed. With him, when the Canadian troops marched past, was Lieutenant-General Hutton. In the pageant of Canadian history was staged for the edification of the royal visitors. On his departure from Quebec for the journey to Sydney, Australia, the duke and duchess were accorded a civic reception.

Upon his accession on May 6, 1910, George and consorts to the dominions, but most significant of all was his one such in the history of India. He said: "I visited India five years ago . . . because I felt that my duty as head of the great kingdoms known to history, with the responsibilities of a sovereign, more than our own, with ancient customs and ways of life, with native princes with the peoples, the cities, towns and villages throughout those vast dominions. Never can the first impressions or the affectionate memories of that wonderful journey vanish or grow dim. Firstly I saw, did in your faithful and secure attachment to the high and ancient traditions that lie before us. . . . and I by the Canadian dragoons in their the Canadian dragoons in their scarlet splendor.

"Their royal highnesses spent a day studying the work of the Parliament and embarked on a "grip" and went down several slides and witnessed an exhibition of log rolling and canoe racing. Continuing their tour with the greatest fortitude, man's meal of port and bones.

Travelling west they visited Ishamable, White River, Port William, Port Arthur, near of course, Winnipeg. On Sept. 26 they reached Calgary, continuing westwards over the Great divide by Vancouver and Victoria.

This brought the westward journey to an end, and turning homewards the royal party reached Toronto on October 16, Fish Hain then descending in torrents, but the station which had been erected where the city was the scene of an enthusiastic demonstration. People, it is said, literally went wild with excitement, and the chair on the steps of the city hall was unable to keep itself heard above the deafening roars. A review of 10,000 troops in Exhibition Park was held, and the duke presented to A. E. O. Cockburn the Victoria Cross, and a event of honor was given by the city. The University was visited in addition to the parliament buildings, while a state reception was held at the government house. Prior to continuing the eastward journey, Niagara, Hamilton and Kingston were visited, Halifax being eventually reached on October 24, and on the 31st the Ophir sailed for home.

Welcome at Guild Hall

On December 8, 1901, at the Guild Hall in London a public welcome was tendered to the Duke and Duchess to which rank His Royal Highness was now elevated. Something to say on that occasion not only descriptive of the journey but also to the world at large that he was no mere figure-head, says the Toronto Globe. During the course of a total of 50,718 miles had been covered, practically all of the small remaining of the Empire had been visited. This tremendous experience had not been undertaken merely as a pleasure trip for the future monarch as to the manner in which the business of the imperial government was conducted. Before the duke's departure he had made rable theory and tackling the Prince gave his impressions of the tour and of the colonies and dependencies in accents that awaited Englishmen of the Empire. The London Standard in a Star calls quotes him as saying, "great bonds of country as yet unrealized by her but making for consolidation, vast expanses of virgin soil ready to receive multitudes of settlers and all this can be entered upon only by a knowledge of the life, liberty, laws, and free institutions, in exchange for overcrowded cities and the struggle for existence, for conscience. But one condition, one only, is made by the new countries, and that is 'send us suitable immigrants'." It was the speech which became famous for the terse phrase "Wake up, England," that was delivered by the Duke of Cornwall the land.

In his mind, "I were asked to specify any particular impressions derived from our journey I should unhesitatingly say that the loyalty of the colonies to the throne and the love they bear it, and it was touching to hear the invariable references to home, even from the lips of those who never had been or were ever likely to be in these islands. And next to that I should were unmistakable evidences of the determination to maintain the integrity and the living membership in the empire, and of power and readiness to bear their due share of the responsibilities of that membership.

Wake Up, England

"To the distinguished representatives of the commercial interests of the empire, whom I have the pleasure of seeing here today," he continued, "I would say a word which alludes to the impression which appeared generally to prevail among their brethren across the seas, that the Old Country was apathetic and if she intends to maintain her old position of pre-eminence in her colonial trade against foreign competitors."

The speech bore the earmarks of personal authorship. The Toronto Star continued, and was delivered with a sincerity and energy of conviction that could not have been prepared beforehand. The duke asked for himself the youthful enthusiasm of his hearers, and the cheers and had found it contagious but it was his ability to transform this inspiration into practical action that was the chief characteristic of his imperial lesson that proved for all time his sagacity and discriminating observation and his genius for things political.

During his last visit to Canada in 1908, he reviewed Canadian troops on the Plains of Abraham, scene of Abraham. A ceremony of handing to Lord Grey, then governor-general, a sum of money publicly subscribed, for the purchase of the historic battleground and its preservation as a national possession and memorial, was performed. With him, when the Canadian troops marched past, was Lieutenant-General Hutton. In the pageant of Canadian history was staged for the edification of the royal visitors. On his departure from Quebec for the journey to Sydney, Australia, the duke and duchess were accorded a civic reception.

so, been characteristic of His Majesty and the Queen that all concerned should be paid as a provision for the honor and dignity of His Majesty's House.

The arrangement was to last during the pleasure of His Majesty but for six months afterwards. It is not unfavorable to the nation, since the annual rent almost equal to all the expenses other than the amount of the civil list.

Refused all Gifts

The King's decision at the time of the accession to refuse the Surrender of the war time gift of $500,000 to the treasury, and when the Queen's Jubilee approached the silver wedding in 1918 they refused all gifts, save a gift of over $280,000 to the Disabled Soldiers' and Sailors' Fund.

During these years of economic stress the King and his gracious consort were unremitting in their endeavours to give a worthy lead to the people of the British Empire and of the nation. At least four Royal Garden Parties were held at Buckingham Palace every season, and His Majesty's Scottish subjects were more than once gratified by the Royal Family held at Holyrood. His Majesty and the Queen received the customary addresses on the years when they made their appearance at Epsom and Ascot for the Derby Day.

Perhaps the most democratic function held in the King's patronage of sport was his attendance at Wembley for the English Cup final. The old-time custom of entering in state upon the race course at Ascot, Goodwood and Newmarket's Queen' Cup was would find Majesty helping to sail in the Cup for Britannia to victory. The opera at Covent Garden was duly patronized and "their Majesties'" attendance once a year at a "command" night at the performance became an established feature.

Beautiful Tribute

"There may have been, nay there surely have been, monarchs who by personal beauty or charm, or by the tenderness of their youth, or even by their very misfortunes and frailties, have made greater appeal to popular imagination than King George V," writes Sir George Arthur, distinguished biographer.

"There are others whose memory is destined to fade almost before their bodies were cold. But history might be ransacked in vain to find a sovereign on whose life, and life work, his people set a higher and a truer value . . . he need only be superficial student of King George's public life to mark that life as based upon religion in the highest sense of the word, its binding oneself up with God.

"To those whose work has touched the King's work at any point or who have rendered him personal service and above all to those who stood by his pillow and watched his failing body grow weaker and more exhausted there may have been a conviction that whether God to live bravely or to die bravely, that God's was the will of a simple, unpretending Christian."

Dawning of Jubilee Year Bright for Great Britain

Many Royal Pageants Marked 25 Years of Rule

As King George neared the span of three score and ten years and entered upon the quarter of a century on the Throne, he had only intermittent recurrences of his slight illness.

Since the illness of 1928-9 special precautions were taken to safeguard his health. On occasions when the weather was unfavorable His Majesty did not attend the Armistice Day service at the cenotaph in London. It was for this reason that the King was not present at the service in 1933 and again in 1935.

In 1893 a man known as C. G. Haddon was arrested on charges of attempting to blackmail the King. Haddon is developed, claimed to be the son of the Duke of Clarence and to be an impostor and when, some months later, he violated a promise to "keep the King's peace" for three years, he was jailed.

Occasional attacks on the Throne were made in parliament. In 1934 Sir Stafford Cripps said in a speech that "Buckingham Palace will have to be overcome if labor again is to have political power." He was roundly rebuked by colleagues and public for this remark and a few days later by publicly drinking a toast to the throne.

Life at Buckingham Palace in 1934 reflected the progress of the nation toward economic recovery. There were balls at Court and in society scores of debutantes and society matrons were presented to the King and Queen. The King's annual attended football finals and Wimbledon tennis matches and appauded performances at Covent Garden by Sophie Tucker and Lily Pech dedicated the Mersey River tunnel at Liverpool and spoke at the launching of the super-liner the "Queen Mary." He was aboard the Britannia when that sturdy racing yacht won a particularly gruelling race at Cowes in August and, true to his reputation as "the Sailor King," lent a hand in trimming the sails.

The betrothal and marriage of the King's fourth son, Prince George, and his elevation to be Duke of Kent, was another happy event.

Had Bright Dawning

The Jubilee Year of 1935 had a bright dawning. The whole Empire prepared to join in acclaiming the man who for 25 years had upheld the traditions of the ancient Throne, keeping it steadfast through war, social change and economic catastrophe and increasing the respect and confidence in which all classes reposed in him.

The government set aside $250,000 for the rites and ceremonies. Every Dominion, colony, shire and village throughout the Union Jack arranged programs.

On May 6, the King saluting and smiling, drove with the Queen through a London packed with cheering Britons. The day through grays drew their State Landau from Buckingham Palace to St. Paul's Cathedral where the King and Queen and a brilliant assembly of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Stalls, knelt in prayer and thanksgiving. Thousands of troops, bands and banners, venetian columns and triumphal arches completed the splendid and solidity of the far-flung British Empire. Indian Princes, Dominion Premiers and Colonial Governors paid homage by their presence. Princess Juliana, however, was the representatives of the Irish Free States.

Many Royal Pageants

Royal pageants crowded upon one another through succeeding months. There were jubilee reviews of fleet, army and air forces, gala theatrical nights and performances, state balls, dinners, civic and official parades and receptions. Through most of them the King played his part.

During the two days before his 70th birthday, he suffered a chill, but June 7 saw him on the saddle for more than an hour at the traditional trooping of the colors by the Horse Guards. He drove to St. Paul's Cathedral on June 8, and, in spite of a severe cold, insisted on the task of bronchial catarrh. A few weeks rest, which prevented his appearance at the fourth Royal Court of the year, made him fit for the Ascot meeting. These events passed without a setback in the King's health. He went to Scotland for the Autumn shooting as keen for that sport as ever.

The Prince of Wales and his brother Duke of York, accompanied the Duchess, in the Ophir in 1901, he made a tour of the dominions, comprising the first parliament of Australia, visiting New Zealand and Australia, Canada and South Africa.

The King always looks back to his naval days with real pleasure and throughout his life has held a keen interest in matters connected with the welfare of the navy and of the marine as their subject.

Sailor Prince Until 27 King George Gave Up Sea To Prepare To Govern

Through Navy Late Monarch Gained Wide Empire Knowledge

ON LONG CRUISES

Death of Prince Albert in 1892 Changed Whole Course of Life

His Majesty King George V. occupied unusual wide knowledge of empire by his travels in the navy. Until he was 27 years of age he was almost constantly at sea. His first voyage was in company of his elder brother, Prince Albert, when the two, as youthful midshipmen, went with H.M.S. Bacchante to the West Indies in the '70s. His first real empire tour was on the Bacchante, in 1879-1880 when along with Prince Albert, he went to South Africa, Fiji Islands, Australia, Ceylon, Egypt, Palestine, Greece and South America.

The London Times, in an article published in 1910, recalls that the two Princes made the Bacchante "except for sleeping in cots under the poop instead of hammocks in the steerage, conformed to the regular discipline of the ship and shared the duties and pastimes of the other youngsters".

This was the first of many visits to the dominions, colonies and foreign ports which made King George the most travelled of Royal Personages, the Times said. On the return of the Bacchante in 1882 after a few months on the continent he was appointed to the Canada, another corvette, commissioned on the North America and West Indies station. Prince Albert no longer accompanied him, being taken apart for training to succeed to the throne on death ten years later prevented this.

On the Canada, however, Prince George appropriately enough made his first visit to the dominion. As the Times' midshipman of the period the Times said, he was devoted to his duties, took a keen interest about the smartness of his boat as any youngster, and zealous to gain the knowledge necessary to advance his career as a naval officer. At the age of 18 (1884) he passed a very close examination in seamanship and was made acting sub-lieutenant, and immediately afterwards entering his course of studies at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich. Here and in the Excellent at Whales he passed the usual routine in succession through the usual routine in navigation, pilotage and gunnery and in 1885 became his vessel's second commission as lieutenant.

In the Mediterranean

The greater part of the next two years was spent in the Mediterranean on the Thunderer and later the Alexandra. He took full advantage of the opportunities of learning the duties of a junior lieutenant including the charge of a watch and a division of great guns. He was then appointed to the Inconstant in the English Channel and for the manoeuvres in honor of the German Emperor's visit. He received his first independent command, a torpedo gunboat, the Thrush, in September, with beam of 13 feet and obviously could not provide the best of accommodation. Writing shortly found its way into the cabins in the Times, he described how he and his junior officers ate and slept. It was remarked at the time that he was quite content with it. The Prince indeed took his command with full appreciation of its responsibilities, when his father sent for him to return to England to attend the Jubilee Commenwl who had conveyed the request said he might be spared for a few days. The Prince replied that he had orders to take his craft to Malta and could not be spared. Fortunately gale, he steamed to Spithead. King Edward came down the Solent in his little craft. Practical seamanship was necessary in the Thrush, constant supervision at the time, and the craft had to put into Gibraltar on the way home and later to Ireland. The Prince was then appointed to the gunboat Thrush as first lieutenant, and then to the Melampus in the 1892 manoeuvres in the Irish sea and off the west coast of Scotland.

Death of Brother

Grief came to the King in untimely fashion when Death proclaimed his sister, Princess Victoria, Dowager Princess of Hohenlohe. A fog-shrouded day caused some concern for its possible effect on the King that he came out of the retirement of mourning on Christmas Day for his annual broadcast to the Empire with a voice that sounded strong to the millions of listeners.

On Jan. 16 it was announced that the King had a slight cold. Word that he had suffered a recurrence of his catarrhal and bronchial ills came the next day, when the Prince of Wales left London for an unheralded visit to Sandringham. Announcement that he was just an ordinary filial trip was followed 24 hours later by a bulletin that the King's condition suddenly had become serious.

KING GRATEFUL FOR AFFECTION

Recognized at Jubilee Personal Character of Tributes

Proof that he had achieved this goal came May 6, 1935, when the tremendous ovation paid to him, to the Queen and all of the Royal Family during their ride to St. Paul's Cathedral to give thanks for 25 years of his reign.

It was typical of King George that he went to this service, not at the end of a glittering cavalcade of Princes, but as the head of a family he embraced, beyond his wife, daughter, sons and grandchildren, the vast periods of Empire that make up the British Empire.

Finally, the personal and personal character of the tributes evoked by his Silver Jubilee was reflected in the loyalty of the Empire on Christmas Day, 1935. He broadcast his message to his family threads, saying:

"The year that is passing, the 25th since my accession, has been to me most memorable. How fitting it fell to me in all the rejoicing not merely respect for the office I hold but also personal remembrance for the man whose privilege and duty it has been to be placed upon it."

The Princess Royal was married to Viscount Lascelles, now Earl of Harewood, in 1922. A year later the Duke of York married Lady Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon. Prince George married the Duke of Kent after he espoused Princess Marina of Greece, Nov. 29, 1934 and the Duke of Gloucester married Lady Alice Scott Nov. 6, 1935.

Five grandchildren of King George were born to these unions. Prince Charles became the mother of two sons; the Duke and Duchess of York, two girls, Princess Elizabeth born April 21, 1926, and of Princess Margaret Rose, born August 21, 1930. Lord Harewood's child was Prince Edward of Kent, born Oct. 9, 1935.

Events in Life of New Monarch

From the cradle upwards the life of Prince Edward of Wales has been a kaleidoscopic succession of events of great interest to the empire. Here are some of the principal ones:

HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VIII AS PRINCE

New King First Bachelor Upon the British Throne Since King George Third

Monarchy Stabilized By New King in Recent Years

INTEREST IN TRADE

As Prince of Wales New King Has Been Leading World Figure

(By Associated Press)

Sandringham, Jan. 21—(AP)—Instantly upon the death of King George V the Prince of Wales automatically succeeded to the Crown, which is the legal link between the peoples of the British Empire.

Ever since the days of Henry VIII the cry "The King is dead, God Save the King" has signified there is no interregnum.

The new King is the first bachelor to succeed to the throne since George III who, however, married years later.

Edward as Prince of Wales and bachelor heir to the British throne, was widely recognized as one of the most influential factors in stabilizing the constitutional monarchy of Great Britain in days when thrones were tumbling and the world was turning to varying forms of republicanism.

Genial, handsome, four years of service in the world war is a country proof of its victory but already sagging under the weight of its sacrifices of blood and treasure, the young prince was given the duty of linking the far-flung British dominions and empire more firmly to the throne and Union Jack, symbols of their kinship and unity.

For the last years he made trips to outlying possessions of the empire over which he was heir to the throne. In that period he visited every continent, bearing messages of good will to British subjects and to foreign friendly countries like the United States, Peru, Chile, Brazil, Argentina, Brazil and Japan.

England's Super-Salesman

Officialdom of the capitals of these countries knew him. So too did the ranchmen of the Canadian northwest, the guides and hunters of the African wilds, the jungle traders and rajahs of India, the pleasure-seekers of Lima and Santiago de Chile and Buenos Aires, Paris and the Riviera.

He went to each dominion to meet its leaders and to learn its needs of life; to non-British realms to forward friendly relations with Britain in those countries. Everywhere, observers said, he left a better comprehension of the best-wishes of the royalty that rests its prestige upon intelligent and sympathetic understanding rather than upon the mere accident of birth.

His accomplishments along these lines were summed up in the London saltbox phrase frequently used upon him of his being "the super-salesman of the British Empire."

His first visit to the United States came in the late summer of 1919. Then he was on his way to Canada. On that occasion, New York, just swinging into the whirlwind routine for distinguished visitors, dressed itself in its best bunting and showered him with ticker tape.

On that journey he bought a ranch in the foothills of the Canadian Rockies. He saw it the second time when he made an incognito trip in 1923 and again the next year when he visited it with Mrs. Simpson, now the United States. On this latter occasion he was on a holiday and most of his hours were devoted to recreation, the chief exception being a call on President Coolidge at the White House.

Befriends British Workers

In the intervals of these journeys the prince explored the nooks and crannies of the United Kingdom. When post-war distress settled upon the mining regions of England, Wales and Scotland, he visited every village to village, talked with the miners, their wives and children, entered their poor homes and did not hesitate to express horror at the slum conditions which existed in his notice.

Rather on his perennial visits to ship yards, factories and other industrial undertakings, he went with a strong determination to "see things" for himself. British workmen, by common acquiescence, came to regard him as a friend for they believed that his sympathetic interest marks on his observations helped the well-to-do of the nation see the struggle for existence in a clearer light.

That came of his war experiences in Flander, France and Egypt starting "from the years I spent in the trenches," for the prince, in private life, was noted for his bubbling wit. Yet even in his gayest mood he guarded a reserve of dignity.

He "danced" among the merry gay as she put a high heel through the hem of a frock while going upstairs, but he was the first to cry out warning:

"Hush!" commanded her escort, "the Prince of Wales is coming."

The prince might be the best of good fellows, but he was a prince for all that and girls might not swear in his presence, even though it might be of his personal friendship circle.

His Boyhood and Youth

News of the birth of an heir to the British throne, flashed to the far corners of the empire upon which the sun never sets by cable graph, cable and fast printing presses, became cause for royal rejoicing, bold first to people who heard it as their accounts had learned of the auspicious event, from the shouts of a speeding horseman.

This horseman, a volunteer courier, had posted himself outside White Lodge, Richmond, in the early hours of June 23, 1894, and when the prince was born he vaulted into the saddle and galloped to London. A few miles down the Thames, about Kew, he passed a pigeon fancier. The day of his death this gentleman boasted he was the first to celebrate the event, but he was right only so far as those who lived near Richmond were concerned.

By the time he reached the capital the bells of all the churches there and throughout the rolling green countryside were ringing out the tidings.

Cries at Baptism

The baby's grandmother, the Princess of Wales, afterwards Queen Alexandra, and Princess Victoria of Teck, were present at the birth and carried the news to an adjoining room where the Duke of York, later afterwards Edward VII and George V, became nervously two days later Queen Victoria, old and feeble, drove the few miles from Windsor to Marlborough to hold the infant in her arms. Three weeks later she held the babe on her lap when he was baptized. A chronicler records that the baptismal ceremony over when the Archbishop of Canterbury touched his head with water.

"The baby" as an infant, the first of his tutors came into his life. She was Mme. Bricka, a French woman who had been the childhood governess of Queen Mary and who lived to kindle a love of all King George's children. The infant's prince, from exciting days to the "understanding" that one day he would be ruler over many, was not a monarch of all the torn by surveyed in the simple nursery.

Before he was 18 months old his brother Prince Albert, now Duke of York, was born. Subsequently came later Princess Mary appeared and later there were Prince Henry, now Duke of Gloucester and Prince George. The eldest and each succeeding child was taught by Mme. Bricka to shake his pigs with his brothers and sisters.

Arithmetic Bothers Him

From Mme. Bricka's babble, the first-born passed to the tutelage of a stalwart six-foot Briton, H. F. Hansell. The principles learned were English, of a sort, and then special tutors started him on German and French. Also he had to struggle with arithmetic, which he did not like. In fact his subjects were many and attained the bare first principles of geometry, His favorite study was history.

When Edward and Albert were in their teens they were sent to the Royal Naval Colleges at Osborne and Dartmouth. Successively then Cambridge undergraduate, midshipman, lieutenant and captain in the royal navy, the future prince in army affairs was as "Corporal Wales" in an officers' training corps. Next he became a lieutenant in the grenadier guards, the outfit with which he took to the trenches.

Sandwiched in between these military experiences, he had a year's course at Magdalen college life in the storied cloisters of Oxford and the historic halls of Cambridge.

Queen Mary as Duchess of York and her children, Edward, Albert and Mary.

His Decorations and Titles

The Prince, very though, he was, probably would have been weighted down if he tried to wear all at once the decorations, ribbons and medals which his own country, friendly foreign powers and his father heaped upon him.

Besides being Princes of Wales, he was Earl of Chester, Duke of Cornwall, Duke of Rothesay, Earl of Carrick, Baron of Renfrew, Lord of the Isles and Great Steward of Scotland and Right Honorable Companion of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath.

When his title was printed formally, as on inaugural programs, tenants of initials followed his name, for he was Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, the empire's premier order of chivalry; Knight Companion, Knight of the Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle, Scotland's order of chivalry; Knight of St. Patrick, Ireland's first order, and grand commander of five other orders and a year of the British Military Medal.

Foreign Honors Galore

All these came from his own government. In addition he received decorations showered upon him by friendship upon him, the list including the Victorian order, he got from the collar of the Chilean Order of Merit. So was he the Grand Cross of Honor from France and Italy's War Cross.

Princes walk now the blithesome prince for only a short while, but he received the Order of Leopold from 15 universities in England, Scotland, Ireland, Canada, South China, and South Africa.

In the British navy he was a vice-admiral, a rank which he received in 1930 after passing through all the lower grades from midshipman to captain. "The same year he was made a field marshal in the army and air marshal in the air force. He was also Colonel-in-Chief, Commander-in-chief of the British Auxiliary Air Force and he was colonel-in-chief of 11 regiments of Guards, with, whom he served in the world war. Royal Scots Fusiliers, whom he donned the kilts; and for nearly two years, the Hussars of India, India and the Dominions.

He ranked too, as a general, in the Canadian army.

For the less, it was a commoner who finally brought the British prince to rest content with a bachelor Prince of Wales and the probability of a bachelor King.

Prospective Queens Charms British

When the Hon. Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon married the Duke of York, she was unknown to caution at large. Within a few months her charm in intelligence had made her one of the most popular members of the royal family that the nation has ever had.

Moreover, the Duke himself in the meantime was the striking evidence that he was fully possessed of his father's sense of duty and earnestness of purpose.

The fact that the Duke and Duchess of York would stand in direct succession to the throne if the Prince of Wales remained unmarried seemed to the British people to be a providential circumstance for the prospect that the prince would never have a direct heir. The Duchess of Kent, Elizabeth was born and began, a few years later, to be talked of as a possible bride for the prince. Then Princess Astrid, later queen of the Belgians, and Princess Ingrid, another possible future queen of England; as was Princess of Rumania, who was Welsh third cousin, and almost every other princess and unmarried female of royal blood.

Failing a royal princess, the suggestion from quarters that Wales might marry a member of some aristocratic English family, or even a girl from some visiting family in one of the Dominions.

Rumor played with the name of this or that English girl; but finally speculation was shipwrecked on the complete and obvious satisfaction of the prince with his bachelor state.

Many people, too, felt far from convinced of the wisdom of his marrying a commoner.

Now the less, it was a commoner who finally brought the British Princess to rest content with a bachelor Prince of Wales and the probability of a bachelor King.

The Duchess of Kent, Elizabeth was born and began, a few years later, to be talked of as a possible bride for the prince. Then Princess Astrid, later queen of the Belgians, and Princess Ingrid, another possible future queen of England; as was Princess of Rumania, who was Welsh third cousin, and almost every other princess and unmarried female of royal blood in Europe.

Failing a royal princess, the suggestion from quarters that Wales might marry a member of some aristocratic English family, or even a girl from some visiting family in one of the Dominions.

Rumor played with the name of this or that English girl; but finally speculation was shipwrecked on the complete and obvious satisfaction of the prince with his bachelor state.

Many people, too, felt far from convinced of the wisdom of his marrying a commoner.

Now the less, it was a commoner who finally brought the British Princess to rest content with a bachelor Prince of Wales and the probability of a bachelor King.

War Service as a Prince

Wales was a junior officer, known privately to hardboiled sergeants as "His Nibs", when he came down from Cambridge to begin drilling and training for the world conflict. He was but a stripling but hard as nails when the armistice silenced.

Once he had to lead his battalion on an all-day "route march" and on the sergeant major, observing the prospect remarked:

"I expect we shall have to carry His Nibs home."

It was a hot day and several soldiers had to drop out but when the order passed: "Backingham Palace on the last long mile of the journey, finished with a spurt," the young lieutenant at the head of the column was there, all full pace and keeping a jaunty swing.

Council Rules: "No Fighting"

The prince crossed the channel with his battalion only to be detailed to the staff duty. He was a spectator of Sir John French, the British commander-in-chief's unsuccessful front line duty. His superiors had a hard time to keep him away from the front line but they finally succeed.

Once, for example, his automobile, far up in the danger zone, was wrecked by a shell. Providentially he was near the front than was the car. Several "War lecturers" had been killed in the front lines in several instances the prince had penetrated to posts within a few terrest memories of his life.

His Bachelor King

The question of succession to the throne and the ultimate status of Prince Edward, brought the real background for the years of interregnum and, in some quarters, downright worry, which caused discussion of the future of the Prince of Wales to marry.

It was not suggested at any time that he should make "a marriage of convenience" of the sort that unmarried royalty have usually contracted through the centuries. The very best himself, it was recognized, should have the principal say as to the choice of his bride.

Such suggestions were numerous and continuous. Princess Ingrid of Sweden for long was the head of this list. It was known that she and the British prince were congenial and it was whispered in court circles that the British royal family would be delighted with the match.

Royal Pair "Egg" Each Other

The prince and princess were said to have been much amused at the fact that each was so obviously expected to fall in love with the other and to have joked over the situation during the Ingrid's recent visits to England.

Intimates of the couple said that the very "desirability" of the match, the suitability of the union acted as a deterrent to romance. By 1932 this gossip had become so much the bee name with that Princess George, youngest brother, Prince George.

Ingrid's sister, Princess Astrid, later queen of the Belgians, was another possible future queen of England; as was Princess Marie Louise, another Welsh third cousin, and almost every other princess and unmarried female of royal blood in Europe.

Failing a royal princess, the suggestion from quarters that Wales might marry a member of some aristocratic English family, or even a girl from some visiting family in one of the Dominions.

Seven Names Given at Baptism

Queen Victoria was still on the British throne when the prince, first of the great-grandchildren, was born on June 23, 1894. He came into the world at White Lodge, a modest royal residence on the edge of Richmond Park, a dozen miles from London.

Three weeks later he was christened by the Archbishop of Canterbury, primate of the established church. Seven names were bestowed upon the infant: Edward, Albert, Christian, George, Andrew, Patrick, David.

Edward was the name of his grandfather, subject to become Edward VII; Albert, was his great-grandfather, consort of Queen Victoria; Christian, a royal name in Denmark, whence the princeling's grandmother, Alexandra, had come to England as a bride; two other names, George, Andrew, Patrick and David, were those of the patron saints of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

Privately, he was "His Royal Highness, Edward, Prince of Wales," and he always signed officially, "Edward, P." But to his family and to his intimate friends, he was "David."

With Queen Victoria he always was a favorite and was the only person who could refuse to do what "Grandmamma" asked as the effects of her royal displeasure. From childhood he had a will of his own, could say "no" with finality and follow his own bent in life.

A governess in babyhood and tutors in boyhood prepared him for college, he matriculated at Magdalen College, Oxford, but fell in with a rather gay set of young aristocrats and left before he had taken any of their escapades, brought about especially after the allies won the world war ended his college days, just as it did that of many another young man.

War Service Halts Pay Years

The prince was 20 when he went to France with his regiment of Grenadier Guards, remained in that zone for more than a year and then, in May, 1916, was transferred to the staff of the commanding general on the Italian front. A month later he went on a mission to Egypt as staff captain. Throughout his service he chafed against regulations and orders which kept him from the firing line. But, in the eyes of staff and dynastic considerations he was retained on staff duty.

In his many post-war days the prince found time for much of the social and welfare activities begun in service in the field had denied him in the early '20's. Standard of a constant diversion. He excelled at no sport but took part in many.

Boating, motoring, flying, racquets and golf were on his list but his passion was for polo. He played hounds or competing in point-to-point races. He came so many "scrapes" at Sandringham and each fall was attended with much publicity as the American and noble knew him as much for the fires which he made as for his skill with his accomplishments in public service.

The greatest public worry over the risks he was running coupled with a desire to keep him outside of economic or stressful years, induced him in 1928 to auction his stables.

He retained only one hunter and thereafter took part only in occasional hunts.

Aviation and motor boating were other hobbies. He took flying lessons and obtained a pilot to his personal staff, maintained his own plane and flew it. On four many of his hops about Britain or his short jaunts to the continent.

Is Confirmed Bachelor

That the prince never married aroused much speculation and gave rise to thousands of his prospective subjects. In that time his name was linked with a number of girls princess and then with another. Sometimes it was a princess of British noble families and even with foreign royalties. Always the Prince of Wales himself that he had any idea of giving up his state of single blessedness.

In time the talk died down, especially after the affairs of his two brothers, the Duke of York, married and became the father of Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret Rose. The heir himself once reflected the changes in opinion when he remarked:

"After all, England had a virgin queen; why not a bachelor king?"

Next in line to him, therefore, was his brother, the Duke of York, late's children and the elder of these grandchildren of King George came to be looked upon as the eventual queen.

Speeds to Stricken Father

That razzle became, in fact, a magnet for three subsequent trips to the Dominion and on one of them, in 1924, he took time off to visit and play with New York's smart set on Long Island. The next formal affair to that visit was a call on President Coolidge at the White House.

The trips to South America were frankly charming visits. Each England was his air on both occasions and one of the subsequent addresses formed the report which he brought back from Buenos Aires, delivered in 1931 Guest to Argentina.

The Indies and African journeys gave him opportunity to go after big game and the 1926 jaunt was dedicated almost entirely to that purpose. It ended dramatically when word reached him in the wilds that his father, King George, was dangerously ill with pneumonia. Reaching the prince travelled 6,000 miles in 14 days, using air transportation wherever it was available. He had to wait two years before he could make the journey sufficiently stable to permit the heir to the throne to absent himself from England.

British Applaud His Journeys

Each succeeding journey seemed only to enhance the popularity of the prince in his own country. Reports of modern news-gathering brought to the British public through the stories of how Wales was winning the regard of Australian farmers, Hindu politicians, Australian ranchmen, Argentine business men, Peruvian cliefs and a host of the other racial and national groups with which he came in contact.

Or the wires related how the prince had been charmed by the dancing grace of some American girl, or how he had shown especial interest in a wild-eyed child jockey in Capetown or gone out of his way to console a native mother in Australia. The British public absorbed all these reports avidly, guess and a verdict of:

"It's a rare 'un—the prince."

His Decorations and Titles

The Prince, very though, he was, probably would have been weighted down if he tried to wear all at once the decorations, ribbons and medals which his own country, friendly foreign powers and his father heaped upon him.

Besides being Princes of Wales, he was Earl of Chester, Duke of Cornwall, Duke of Rothesay, Earl of Carrick, Baron of Renfrew, Lord of the Isles and Great Steward of Scotland and Right Honorable Companion of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath.

When his title was printed formally, as on inaugural programs, tenants of initials followed his name, for he was Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, the empire's premier order of chivalry; Knight Companion, Knight of the Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle, Scotland's order of chivalry; Knight of St. Patrick, Ireland's first order, and grand commander of five other orders and a year of the British Military Medal.

Foreign Honors Galore

All these came from his own government. In addition he received decorations showered upon him by friendship upon him, the list including the Victorian order, he got from the collar of the Chilean Order of Merit. So was he the Grand Cross of Honor from France and Italy's War Cross.

Princes walk now the blithesome prince for only a short while, but he received the Order of Leopold from 15 universities in England, Scotland, Ireland, Canada, South China, and South Africa.

"The same year he was made a field marshal in the army and air marshal in the air force. He was also Colonel-in-Chief, Commander-in-chief of the British Auxiliary Air Force and he was colonel-in-chief of 11 regiments of Guards, with, whom he served in the world war. Royal Scots Fusiliers, whom he donned the kilts; and for nearly two years, the Hussars of India, India and the Dominions.

He ranked too, as a general, in the Canadian army.

Freed from the trappings of royalty and mingling with his fellows as "David Windsor" on the deck or on the floor of an evening, the Prince of Wales was regarded as a "good sort" and thoroughly "good mixer."

When he was on war duty in France he wrote to Vienna, "I run before breakfast." Later, and described a certain game as "two miles to run."

He developed for his world-wide journeys, he religiously tramped the decks for his morning exercise, in the ship's gymnasium or bored with the gym instructor. Mornings on the gym or at his bachelor establishment of Fort Belvedere in Windsor Park, for years with Prince George, he was out early in slacks, sweater, shirt and tennis shoes for "road-work" through a park or by-path, finishing with a dash to the shower and then tackling breakfast with hearty appetite.

Result of this was that he kept his weight to around 160 pounds, a comfortable height and frame. It also was a good riding weight and he was always careful limited not to take his tumbles in polo, point-to-point races or fox hunting without undergoing serious damage.

Trinity House, a body which concerns itself with details of navigation. And he was patron, founder or chairman of scores of other societies of various kinds.

He Had 14 Carnegies

Each of these required some of his time and most of them called for uniform or regalia. The Carnegie was that worn as an officer of no matter what organization, civic, military or governmental, there was a ceremony.

Outstanding among the hundreds of formal occasions in which he played the leading role were his investitures as Prince of Wales at Caernavon Castle in 1910; his first appearance in the House of Lords when he was 21 and his investiture as Knight of the Garter at Windsor.

The one that appealed most to popular imagination was the historic Caernvon formality.

There had been native princes of Wales from time immemorial until King Steward I, in the closing decades of the 13th century, promised them a royal prince of their own. He took his queen to Caernavon and in due time presented to the Welsh an infant prince born on the soil of Wales. Since that date there has been always a long line of Longshanks Princes.

Gets Income from Duchy

Most practical of the supplementary possessions of the present-day prince was his Duchy of Cornwall, created by Edward III (1327-77) for his eldest son. This is because parliament provides for the King and Queen and all members of the Royal Family with one notable exception, the Duke of Windsor.

The Duchy of Cornwall embraces the greater part of southwest England, with parts of Devon, Somerset, Devonshire and Wales. Ever since the time of Edward III the succession of the King has enjoyed the incomes from the Caravern and, in addition, mines, farms and city properties. The prince did not benefit by these incomes but there were certain deductions under various acts of parliaments, especially for upkeep, large allowances for charities and for pensions to servants which kept down his net receipts. Probably he seldom got more than $200,000 a year, a figure which would have been considered small for many wealthy households of England in the years long before the World War.

Has Three Real Chums

The real confidants of the Prince were his younger brother, George; Brigadier-General Clive Gerald Trotter, his equerry and guide, whom Wales called "Trotter" for short and "dear friend," and Lord Erimam, a man of his own age whose life was divided between the duties of the dukedom of his mother by drowning, of his own estates and the responsibilities of his wife in an air crash. It was Lord Erimam whom Wales intimately turned to "David" and found the consolation needed in the days of his own bereavement.

Among the women friends the prince appeared to take most pleasure in the society of Mrs. Freda Dudley Ward, wife of a former member of the royal household. She was five years the senior of the Prince, a brilliant and beautiful woman. In his tastes and ambitions he was essentially a man's man," no woman could claim to have an influence over his career and it was widespread knowledge of this fact which gained for his whole-hearted respect throughout the nation.

Yet he has found time somehow for an enormous amount of minor activities and has always been smiling and buoyant.

Enjoys Family Life

The Prince has been kept so busy at working and travelling that he has had less time than his brothers to spend with his parents and other kin; yet he somehow has managed to keep in touch considerably with the many family life which the House of Windsor has lived to lead whenever there is an opportunity.

Last Christmas, as when he has been in London, the court calendar has reported that the Prince of Wales visited Buckingham Palace for luncheon, tea, dinner, or the case might be. He was many short, hurried visits to which the calendar never recorded. When the court was out of London, he usually has gone least for a few days to visit his brother and sister.

Observant and Observant

The Prince is 41 years old but he is younger. Sometimes his face has almost boyish. He is of medium height and of well-knit, slim build. His hair is dark and he is shaven with features somewhat aquiline. Keen, intelligent-looking, he is as shrewd and observant as he appears. Whatever he does or goes on about him eludes his notice, and he possesses in marked degree the faculty of remembering what he sees.

The Prince grasps the hand of peasant or peer with equal cordiality and he has infinite capacity for liking and keeping friends. He frequently goes immediately as having observed dignity which is apt to set itself on suitable occasions, but he holds in check any approach to undue familiarity.

The prince has a rather high, resonant voice and speaks with clarity of enunciation, excellent judgment and absolutely convincing sincerity.

Has Winning Smile

His smile, as everyone who ever saw him or his photograph agrees, is winning. It is a genial, spontaneous and frank smile, suggestive of no suppressions. The Earl of Elgin, a Scottish Nobleman of and to him in Kinbrace, Sutherland, of his engaging smile, and added: "If I may say so, always at the moment there is charm of your smiles".

The other found the smile with sometimes give place to a look of frown. His can and has indulged in every degree of anger, from that as sin to many other respects, strongly condemned by his grandfather, King Edward. Contrary to the generation come naturally to him, there is also a rugged side to nature.

Loves All Sports

The Prince of Wales embodies to perfection the democratic passion of outdoor activities and sports which for centuries has been an essential characteristic of British gentlemen. Like most Englishborn Britons he is a champion in no particular sport, but participates in and loves a variety of them.

He is happiest when riding to hounds or playing polo. The latter gives a great deal, but more often as a refreshment after indoor exercise than as a sport for its own sake. Occasionally he plays squash racquets.

At hunting the Prince is reasonably good, though he does not often put on the gloves.

Once when he was on shipboard, the Prince almost always visits the gymnasium daily, and takes long fast bumps about the deck. If he is in the country, and riding is not convenient, he plays a round of golf.

The Prince played lawn tennis occasionally in his youth but recently he never greatly cared for the game, and has not played it at all in recent years.

Received Many Injuries

The Prince has won several prizes for point-to-point steeplechases and has also received some bad knocks. Bruises and concussions he has experienced several times, and he can also number among the results of his falls from the saddle a broken collar bone, and a twisted ankle. No injury ever deterred him from dashing riding on his back into the field.

No matter how busy and active in a physical way his days have been, the Prince has always been willing and anxious to dance when night came. He is a most courtly and attentive partner. He never seems to tire of the exercise. Once while in Canada during a tour spell he twice danced three times during a dance to replace collars that had wilted.

Most Photographed Man

The Prince, without doubt, has been photographed many times and in a greater variety of circumstances than any man who ever lived. Almost everything that he does in his daily life has been recorded on the films or plate of the camera.

That cameramen are occasionally beyond his ken is obvious, but he seldom shows it. Sometimes his equerries are plainly incensed, and have to use a few strong words to restrain their never-satisfied impulses, but the Prince has never once been known to speak harshly or act rudely to them. He appreciates the tremendous public interest in his doings, and he sometimes remarks: "The photographers have to make their living."

Enjoyed Ranch Life

The Prince is a practical farmer and a successful breeder of pedigree cattle. One of his cherished possessions is his ranch in Alberta.

He does not pose as an expert but he knows more about these things than most people would give him credit for, and it is not as the mere nominal owner of prize stock that he has earned the right to the title book sales" at the Ahbridge.

One of the many incidental tasks that his position has forced upon the Prince of Wales has been that of settling the style in what the well-dressed man will wear.

Set Style in Hats

When he visited New York the anxiety to greet him seemed almost hysterical. One day, on Long Island, the Prince was in a hurry and sunny, the Prince wore the brim of his panama hat turned down all around. The next day thousands of men were panama hats with the brim turned down. Then the Prince wore a felt hat. The brim instead of being turned up all around was turned down in front and up on one side. That sort of hat became fashion.

But when the Prince got home he found that type of hat he had favored before he left. For, with him, it seems to be what is sensible and fitting; then was the choice of apparel at any given time.

BIRTH OF PRINCE NOTABLE EVENT

All Britain And Empire Astir When Edward Was Born

London, Jan. 21.—(AP)—The fierce glare of publicity focused upon Prince of Wales—now assuming the throne as King-Emperor—by the press and the people of almost all the world, was turned upon him 43 years ago this coming June.

There were telegraphs and fastworking printing-presses in those days, but the people near Richmond found out that a Prince had been born as of old when the arrival was cries of a speeding horseman. This gentleman had posted himself outside White Lodge, Richmond, as soon as he knew the baby was due.

In the early hours of the morning of June 26, 1894, Prince was born. Jumping into the saddle, the horseman rode furiously into Leo den, a few miles down the Thames, shouting as he went, "A prince! A prince!"

News Acclaimed

But London itself already had the news by telegraph. By the time horseman had reached Leo den shops and decks the bells of nearly all the churches through the length green countryside of England were ringing a gladsome acclamation.

The public enthusiasm for the Prince which began that day as a national baby has grown to an international. His popularity knows no boundaries, and is shared heartily by millions of people who do not speak his language or know anything much about the country.

Queen Victoria was not present at the birth of her great-grandson, but she was one of the first to go to see him. She was staying at Windsor Castle and drove by carriage to hold the new-born prince in her arms, on the second day after his entry into the world.

A Favorite of Queen Victoria

His two grandmothers, the Princess of Wales (afterwards Queen Alexandra, and the Duchess of Teck), looked upon his birth, and, with his nurse, carried the happy news to a nearby room where the boy's father and his grand-father, later King Edward, joined the floor nervously like fathers and grandfathers of commoner clay the world over.

With Queen Victoria he was the favorite, declined some day to act upon her throne. Perhaps she agitated him, when will, still a strong part of his make-up, for the little prince, with his golden curls, was one of the few who dared to set his will against his grandmother's.

He was not a stubborn child. On the contrary he was usually amenable to the wishes and requests of others, but he had a will of his own and early learned the strength of the word "no". With all his renowned smile, his eagerness to follow the fashions, his charm, his democracy, spirit and manners, he still knows how and when to use, with undeniable will, the right short, forceful word.

Order of Succession to Throne

(By the Canadian Press)

Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David, Prince of Wales, who succeeds his father to the throne, will probably reign as Edward VIII. The choice of a name has not yet been made but since the Prince ordinarily signs himself Edward P. it seems most probable he will retain that name as king.

The Duke of York, His late Majesty's second son, becomes heir-presumptive. He will be superseded in the line of succession by any issue of the new King.

After the Duke of York the line of succession is as follows:

Princess Elizabeth of York.
Princess Margaret of York.
The Duke of Gloucester.
Prince Edward of Kent.
Prince George, Jr.—(Age—The demise of the Crown is an event which automatically dissolves Parliament and both Houses of Parliament to meet at once. It is the duty of the Lords of the Privy Council to assemble in order to approve the proclamation announcing the new King.

The death of the King is the only occasion in which parliament is required by statute to meet at once without the usual summons. All ordinary business in both houses is suspended until the members have taken the oath of allegiance to the new king. All members must first be sworn in again just as they were when they initially took their seats.

WOMAN TUTOR GUIDES PRINCE

Young Man Who Has Become King Loved College Life

Until he was ready to take up college studies, the Prince of Wales was educated by private tutors. The first of the names brought into his life when he was a babe in his nursery, was that of Mme. Madame Bricka, a French woman.

The Prince had not been acquainted long with Mme. Bricka, for his own language before tutors introduced him to French and German. His childhood was almost as busy as his manhood has been. There were three languages to learn, and arithmetic, which he did not like and never was pressed to continue after he had attained a sound understanding of it. Most of all the studies he liked history, and the lore of bygone kings and queens.

For his careers both in the army and navy he began to train as a tiny tot. He "played soldier" in the royal gardens, and when it was seen he liked the game, real soldier was called in to drill him and his playmates. His chief joy was first interested in sailing toy ships about little ponds, and then taught how to handle a real boat.

Enjoyed College Life

As an author of books and his brother Albert were well in their teens they were sent to the Royal Naval college at Osborne and Dartmouth. Successively and successfully he Prince became cadet, midshipman, lieutenant and captain in the Royal Navy.

The Prince's first real experience of military matters was as a corporal in an officers' training corps and as "Corporal Wales" as some of his fellow-students knew him, was recognised as keen on his new profession. He next became a lieutenant in the Grenadier Guards, and his relish for soldiering increased. He was a junior officer when the Great War began.

Sandwiched in between his military training and his war experiences, the Prince tasted — in the words of his people — "a little only a short taste — the joys of college life at Magdalen, the ancient Oxford and later Cambridge.

He has been at Cambridge only a short while when the war broke out, and the great joys of college and youth of the land, he left the classroom for the drudgery of military life.

CANADA PLUNGED INTO MOURNING

People Had Hoped Against Hope Beloved King Would Recover

(By The Canadian Press)

The sands was measured from Canada's rugby face today by realization that the great heart had ceased to beat. The wires seemed resonant and strong when last he listened to them with his radio Christmas Day, was dead. The Dominion receded no official proclamation, no barring of doors to amusement houses, no statement by government, was there a period of mourning.

The stricken King died last night at 8.56 p.m. E.S.T., and within 30 minutes Canada was transformed into a country of gloom. The note of gaiety that hung in the air as Canadians popped the New Year festivities, expected to open today, was deferred.

Mayors of most of Ontario's municipalities, including Toronto, Hamilton, Guelph, Oshawa, Eric, Orillia and Barrie, adjourned their regular meeting of council pending action and dispatched telegrams of condolence to Premier Mackenzie King at Ottawa, to be transmitted to the Royal family.

The governor of the Kingston Chamber of Commerce to have been held tonight, Wednesday, Jan. 22, was cancelled.

Bells Are Tolled

Last night, within five minutes after news of the King's death was circulated in Toronto, bells tolled in scores of churches and municipal halls. Many flags flew half-mast-fully, informing the people of the Empire's bereavement from the Rideau city city hall over the solemn notes of the great bell tolled out by the caretaker of the.

Canadian radio stations centered their programmes for several hours before the King died. Radio men in the studios were informed on his Majesty's condition and, after the announcement was read the stations closed for the night.

Premier Mackenzie King's sorrow came from 'dozens of sources—from Premier Taschereau, Premier Ferguson, Premier Tweedsmuir; from Prime Minister Mackenzie King, Provincial Lieutenant-Governors and Premiers, former Prime Ministers Sir Robert Borden and R. B. Bennett and from heads of foreign legations in Ottawa.

Many of them stressed Canada's great personal loss in the death of a sovereign who was especially close to Canadians because of visits to this country by his sons and because the Empire was brought so intimately together during the Great War years.

Special Life Related

Today Canada eliminated its social life for the time being as a mark of respect and gave visible sign of its grief. All flags were set at half-mast, many business places were draped with royal purple and black. Church services of intercession were held throughout the country.

All business will be suspended for two hours. It was executives' lifted schools would be closed, places of amusement shut down, public gatherings—except in church—called off.

Life in Canada's capital city moved today with arrested step, the subduing influence of grief overlapping all national activity.

From the Governor-General of Canada to the least exalted in the country came expressions of tribute and of sorrow.

He was a friend to all, rich and poor alike, sharing to the full in their joys and sorrows," said Lord Tweedsmuir, the Governor-General. "Feared God, Loved People"

King George would wish for no better epitaph, the Governor-General said, than that he feared God and loved and served his people.

Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King recalled how in the tempest of war the deceased sovereign had stood as the symbol of the common effort and converted action of all parts of the British Commonwealth of Nations," and he had been the "rallying centre of all the British peoples."

"Having regard to the times and to the issues he and his ministers were called upon to face," Mr. Mackenzie King said, "it can truly be said that never" was a better King."

From Calgary the Rt. Hon. R. B. Bennett, former Prime Minister, voiced his deep sorrow. In Canada and elsewhere throughout the Empire, there was mourning he said.

Served Right Hand

Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Borden, the King's Canadian counsellor during the war years, spoke of a sovereign who was the friend of peace and exemplar of goodwill to all mankind.

"Nurtured in the ideal and tradition of duty," said Sir Robert, "the King deemed himself from the first the servant of his people. To this true conception of service he has faithfully adhered in his reign."

From foreign countries came to the Governor-General expressions of sympathy. President Franklin D. Roosevelt of the United States cabled to His Excellency the sympathies of the American people.

Prince of Wales Held in High Regard in Canadian West

An impulse born as he rode through Southern Alberta's hilly ranges made the Prince of Wales a Canadian rancher in his own right. Men regard there became wide and seemed resonant and strong when last he listened to them with his radio Christmas Day, was dead. The Dominion receded no official proclamation, no barring of doors to amusement houses, no statement by government, was there a period of mourning.

KING WILL LIE IN STATE

ence Hon. Vincent Massey, newly-appointed Canadian High Commissioner in London. The day previous he had bade farewell to Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, who was leaving that post.

Had Knowledge of Canada

His Majesty's knowledge of the Dominion, as revealed in even a few minutes' talk, especially when the talk was informal, was truly remarkable, said Premier King. It was obvious, too, that his remarks were entirely spontaneous, Mr. Ferguson added.

The Sandringham estate lies on the borders of the flat Norwalk countryside known as the Broads. This area, practically at sea level, was reclaimed ages ago from the sea. It is not unlike many parts of Holland similarly reclaimed.

The estate was purchased when the Prince of Wales, afterwards King Edward VII, was 23, shortly before his marriage. The purchase price was 220,000 pounds. The previous owner, Spencer Cowper, was an absentee landlord. The house was then little more than a shooting box. Extensive additions were made at considerable expense. Money for this purpose was available through careful nursing of the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall, which for years have gone to the Prince of Wales During King Edward's authority, when he was 18 years old, the Duchy revenues were increased from 14,000 to 60,000 pounds.

Simple Personal Property

The bequests of members of the Royal Family are never published, although naturally the larger dispositions become known. Osborne Castle in Scotland also is the King's private property, but the remainder of the royal residences are vested in the Crown.

It is almost certain the new King must leave his small but cosy Sandringham home for the more formal Buckingham Palace. Queen Mary will return from Marlborough House, where she spent her earlier years as Princess of Wales. Queen Alexandra returned there upon the death of King Edward but since her death the house has been remanted, although fully maintained. The grounds sometimes have been used for charity fetes.

A Perfect Pair

King Edward and his Queen, like King George and Queen Mary later, found Sandringham a perfect haven from the constant glare of publicity. King Edward has left on record, in a letter to a friend in the United States, how they were perfectly left the early days of their occupancy.

"Fancy, Saturday had a reporter from Lynn actually joined the beaters while we were shooting," he wrote, "but as I nearly shot him in the legs as a rabbit was passing, he very soon gave me a wide berth. General Knollys (King Edward's private secretary) then informed him his presence was not required. He skedaddled, as the Yankees say, and wrote an appalling article on his infamous conduct. I don't think he will trouble us again."

Everyone nowadays rigidly respects the royal privacy at Sandringham, although King George and King George, when shooting on the estate as such old friends as the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth or Holton Abbey, genially tolerated the presence of the press as a discreet distance.

Ministers will be moved in both Houses immediately upon the reassembly of parliament, the leaders of all parties speaking. The death of King Edward was notable because it was the first time a Labor premier man had participated.

Later, parliament must concern itself with rearrangement of the civil list. The civil list comprises the annuities payable to the King and Queen and to the members of the Royal Family. It is passed by a committee of both Houses, with some others, will be appointed to make recommendations. These are likely to be extensive, as the new King is unmarried.

Six Months Full Mourning

Until the Reform Act of 1867 the House of Commons was subject to dissolution upon the demise of the Sovereign, now it is only necessary to assemble forthwith. If precedent is followed a royal proclamation will be ordered for six months, and half mourning for another six months.

There will be no royal courts or garden parties this year, which will be particular disappointment to many intending visitors from overseas, whose applications for presentation already have been submitted.

The admiralty flag was halfstaffed while only anyone knew of the death of the Sovereign. All the ships sailing under the admiralty flag fire 70 rounds, one for each year of the king's life. The flags of all the warships will be at half-mast until the funeral is over.

Queen Alexandra was widowed, her title for a short time was the Queen Dowager, but upon Alexandra's objections it was altered to the Queen Mother.

The Queen will remain the first lady in the land, followed by the Princess Elizabeth, the Princess Mary, Gloucester and Kent, and the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, daughters of the Duke and Duchess of York.

The Duke of York becomes the heir presumptive. The term heir apparent can only apply to the Sovereign's son or grandson.

The title Prince of Wales will probably lapse, although the King is entitled to confer it anywhere. But it has by immemorial custom been reserved for the eldest son of the Sovereign.

TOLLING BELLS MARK PASSING OF LOVED KING

Veterans Close Quarters as Sad Tidings Come In

Tolling serenely these, one stroke for each year of the King's life, the bell in the City Hall Tower solemnly began to ring immediately upon the receipt of the news that His Majesty, King George V had died last night. With precision the bell sounded at a solemn note at distinct intervals while, on Front St. citizens nearing the solemn ceremony, walked in reverence, their conversation in noises being heard in the downtown area during the early hours of the evening. Immediately the flag on the City Hall tower was lowered to half-staff where it will remain for some considerable period of time. The death of His Majesty was keenly felt along the business section of Front St., as business was at a stand-still and citizens spoke in reverence relative to the passing of a loved monarch.

Immediately upon the receipt of the news that His Majesty, King George V had died, the quarters of the Belleville Post 90 of the Canadian Legion, situated in the Memorial Hall, were respectfully closed for 36 hours and all blinds drawn in reverence to the passing of a loved Monarch. The ex-soldiers present in the canteens and recreation rooms during the late hour last night with bowed heads and a feeling of sadness, left for their respective homes. Later the flag, that flies on the top of the building was lowered to half staff where it will remain until mourning draperies will be placed along the front of the building for the usual military mourning period. A number of the local Legionnaires had many times seen their beloved King during the days of the late war, many of them having served near the field of action in France during the 'dark days of the war'. The late King was a loved monarch by all his fighting men, who will ever cherish his memory and respect for England's King.

Special memorial prayers were offered in the Sons of Jacob Synagogue last night as a fitting tribute to the sterling character and beauty of the late British sovereign, King George the Fifth. Services were conducted by Rabbi Oscar Lasoff assisted by Mr. J. Diamond, Mr. J. Berger, past president, Mr. B. Spiegel, Mr. M. Vogelman and Mr. J. Samosh. Additional services will be held on the day the King is laid to rest.

Church bells throughout the city tolled in solemnizing sequence immediately upon the receipt of the news of His Majesty's death last night. At St. Michael's Church the bell in the belfry tolled the news of the first in the city to be heard tolling the sad news. The sad occasional flag is flying at half-staff on St. Michael's Academy in solemn remembrance.

Although no official military orders had been received by Col. Geen of the Argyll Light Infantry Battalion at noon relative to military mourning following the death of His Majesty, King George V, the flag on the local Armouries was lowered to half-staff immediately upon the receipt of the news of the death of His Majesty last night. Lengthy details as to military mourning for soldier units throughout the Dominion are expected to be issued from the Department of National Defence, today and will be followed by memoranda immediately upon receipt.

As a token of respect and sorrow the flag was flying at half staff from the tower of St. Thomas' Church.

Numerous business places and public buildings throughout the city today are flying their flags at half-staff in respect to His Majesty, so widely loved and honoured.

During the progress of the weekly Y's Men's Club meeting at the Y.M.C.A. last evening the usual singing of the National Anthem in response to the toast to the King was dispensed with and a two minute silence observed at the request of President Dr. Jack Marshall. As the meeting was in session prior to the reception of the news of His Majesty's death, the remainder of the club's business was not completed in solemn order.

The entire city was plunged into a deep feeling of mourning as citizens felt keenly the passing of their beloved Monarch, which was clearly manifest by the solemn tones of conversation.

'I Reign But I Do Not Rule' Famous Saying of King George

Condolences Sent to British Royal Family by President And Leaders of United States

Washington, Jan. 21 (AP)—Unfeigned expressions of regret that a "good king" had passed away were heard here today as leaders of the United States sent condolences to the family of King George.

President Roosevelt sent a cablegram to the new king, Edward, as well as to Queen Mary, and to the Governors General of the British Dominions. Secretary of State Hull sent messages to the Prime Ministers of Britain and the Dominions.

To Edward, who twice visited the White House as Prince of Wales, the President messaged:

"I'll is with deep sorrow that I learn of the death of His Majesty, your father. I send to you my profound sympathy and that of the people of the United States, in whose respect and affection he occupied a high and unique place. I thank God—I reign but I do not rule."

This was at a time when European thrones were tottering in the post-war days.

The new monarch, then the Prince of Wales, first visited Washington in November, 1919.

In August, 1924, he was again entertained here.

His Majesty King George V

Young King, Hatless, Arrives at Palace

London, Jan. 21 (CP)—A human touch showing the nervous strain under which the new king was burdened came when he stepped out in front of the royal car at St. James' Palace on arrival from Sandringham.

Hatless, he walked briskly into the palace between the stiff-backed sentries with the bare head of his uncovered bayonets glinting in the sun at "present arms".

A moment later, the king hurried back to the car to retrieve a package he had forgotten.

The guns in Hyde Park boomed dully across the Whitehall as tens of thousands of spectators watched the car vanish into the palace.

Soldier Rode in Royal Limousine With King George and Queen Mary

London, Jan. 21 (CP)—If he has not been taken by death himself, there is a sailor among the millions mourning King George today who can boast he once rode down the mall with the king and queen in the royal limousine.

It happened in 1919, when the great war veterans were coming home. A sailor, very much "under the weather" from injudicious celebrating, jumped on the running board of the king's car and insisted on shaking hands with His Majesty. An equerry horrified, tried to push him off, but the sailor stuck to his guns.

"I've fought for him and I'm going to ride with him," he announced and that all could hear.

Suddenly a gloved hand opened the door and the King's husky voice said, "come on in".

So the sailor was sitting at Their Majesties' feet.

King George had a good time on their ride down the park asking questions and watching the sailor's reactions.

The unexpected rider got out at Trafalgar Square and took off his hat as the royal car rolled away.

"Fine chap," was all he said.

DECLARATION MADE BY KING

LONDON, Jan. 21 (C.P. Cable)—Only a few members of the cabinet were specially summoned to attend the privy council meeting today, a group of more than 300, including peers, privy councillors, Bondfield, a Labor leader, were allowed to attend.

The Lord Mayor and aldermen of the City of London, wearing their gowns of mourning, marched with the cock-hatted, sworded and gold-laced permanent heads and church dignitaries parked in ecclesiastical purple.

The new sovereign made his declaration and received the oath of allegiance from the councillors who served his late father.

The council, which was in session just under an hour, heard King Edward intone this age-old declaration:

"I, Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David, do solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God, profess, testify and declare that I am a faithful member of the Protestant Reformed Church by law established in England, and that I shall, according to the true intent of enactments which secure the Protestant succession to the throne of my realm, uphold and maintain said enactments to the best of my powers, according to law."

After his entrance into St. James, through streets lined with thousands of subjects, the new King went to Buckingham Palace to see his brother, the Duke of Gloucester, with whom he talked for half an hour. The Duke is ill with a cold.

Afterward he went to York House, his official residence as the Prince of Wales, to attend a meeting of naval, military, police and royal household officials to discuss the arrangements for the ceremonials of the next few days.

His proclamation as King will be given tomorrow morning. The body of the late King will be brought to London Thursday.

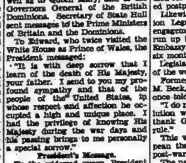
HOUSEHOLD CALM

Patronship of Home Broken by Death Lingers in Memory

BY ELMER PETERSON
Associated Press Staff Writer.



Sandringham, England, Jan. 21 (AP)—Courageous Queen Mary, her steady calm broken only momentarily by the death of King George night, the multitudes walked under a huge electric bulletin board. Hundreds clung to the statue of Eros, Piccadilly landmark.

Finally the tragic news flashed out. Exclamations and groans arose. Then, sorrowfully, the crowd turned to its homes. Many missed the last trains.

The Standard at Windsor Castle near London, lowered only on the death of a reigning Sovereign, was set down by the Royal Bargemen.

The syncopated music of hotel orchestras halted abruptly. Patiently, groups raised their voices in the majestic strains of the National Anthem, "God Save the King."

Extra newspaper editions flooded the district, their columns heavily bordered in black. Pictures of the old king new kings appeared side by side with many pages devoted to the dead monarch's life and reign.

Queen Tirahan

This morning, regaining the sturdy self-control of Highland stock, out His Majesty's brief, fatal illness had been, the Queen faced the tragic news to other, distant members of the Royal Family.

Refusing to admit herself tired, refusing also to lend weight to distraught emotion, she passed away during the four days of sickness, the Queen, at the request of the royal physicians themselves.

She remained, now, within call of her husband's bedroom removed from his only by a sitting room.

To Queen Mary, the King's death was the passing of a beloved companion, a companion who became a vivid symbol to the Empire of happy home life. She was his wife.

"Mary, you were our you?" the King used to call when, as a young prince, he was at work in his study. "Mary, you were our you?" he would call.

Her son, she may continue to preside at court ceremonies, lending the dignity of her presence to the new reign.

Memories Without Shadows

The British public as a whole watched Queen Mary, "the good Queen," regardless of her constitutional status.

Since the day when the Duke of York's daughter married George, Duke of York, years ago, the Princess May, as she was then called, received the homage of the unpurightness and duty she had been reared to consider synonomous with Without.

She has been faithful, devoted, and has ever been cast upon the complete and open harmony of the royal home.

DIPLOMATIC BALL IS CANCELLED

France Pays Tribute to British Monarch King George

Paris, Jan. 21 (AP)—Death of King George V. of Great Britain turned France's attention temporarily today from the prospective fall of the French cabinet.

President Lebrun announced postponement of the diplomatic ball tomorrow. Flags on all public buildings and embassies were lowered to half staff on receipt of news of the British monarch's passing.

While the domestic situation continued perilous with fears expressed of possible financial difficulties following resignation of Radical Socialist cabinet members, indications appeared that a new ministerial combination might be formed from a coalition of Radical Socialists, Rightist and Leftist parties.

Premier Laval left Geneva for Paris with the intention, his friends said, of handing in his resignation.) President Lebrun sent the following message to Queen Mary:

"In great grief which strikes Your Majesty so cruelly I wish to assure you I very sincerely share your bereavement and ask you to accept an expression of my respectful, sorrowful sympathy."

"It is with deep emotion I learned of the death of His Majesty King George V," the French President telegraphed the new British monarch.

LONDON THROWN INTO GRIEF

Those words, whispered by a grief-stricken servant carried the first news of the King's death to an anxious crowd outside Buckingham Palace last midnight.

"The good, he's dead!" the murmur flashed through the throng. Men bared their heads. Three women fainted.

The official bulletin repeated the servant's words.

"His Majesty is dead."

Thousands Jam Streets

Thousands jammed Piccadilly Circus, heart of London's theatre district, where the death report came thirty minutes after the official announcement at Sandringham.

HOUSE OPENING IS CANCELLED

As the situation now stands, the regular session which the government plans to hold after Easter, about one recessed for three weeks a month, will be held sometime in February. Should it take place before the opening of the Dominion Parliament Feb. 6, this would be the first legislature in the Dominion to meet under the new King.

No Formal Opening

There will be no formal opening to this session. Ladies, who as a matter first, provide a brilliant spectacle in the Legislative Chamber with their colorful attire, will not be present. Only members of the House will be attained in informal attire in the spectators' galleries. Only the 90 members of the Legislature will be at their desks when Lieutenant-Governor Herbert A. Bruce reads the Speech from the Throne.

The Acting Premier's announcement of the cancellation followed a proclamation by the Lieutenant-Governor revoking the original proclamation by which the members were summoned for the opening. Previously the caucus advised the Lieutenant-Governor to take this action.

Members of the legislature will be required to take an oath of allegiance to the new King in place of the personal one to King George which they took at office, taken by the cabinet members when their term in 1934 need not be renewed. It was stated, because this oath is to the office rather than the monarch.

BACHELOR KING ASCENDS THRONE

dence when he was Prince of Wales.

The new King, first British monarch to use a plane, took off at 11.45 a.m. (4.45 a.m. E.S.T.) from the Bircham Newton Airport near Sandringham on the 100-mile flight to London, accompanied by his brother, the Duke of York, heir-presumptive to the throne.

Although the King often flies his own plane, his private pilot sat at the controls for today's flight.

He and the Duke of York had worked with palace officials throughout the early morning, drawing up final plans for the late King's funeral.

The plans for all ceremonies, it was announced, would be made public after further consultations at London.

Promptly at 9.00 a.m. (4.00 a.m. E.S.T.) every British ship and naval establishment throughout the world lowered colors to half mast, to remain there until George is laid to rest at Windsor.

The bells of St. George's Chapel re-echoed at Windsor, where one of the saddest tasks of her life befell the Duchess of York.

The late King's only granddaughter, Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, retired last night without knowing their grandfather was dying. This morning, the Duchess, who is convalescing from influenza, had promised to tell them.

The blinds of the royal lodge at Windsor Great Park, where the mother and daughters—second and third in the line of succession to the throne—are residing, were tightly drawn.

The peaceful death of King George V, just before last midnight at Sandringham gave his 41 year old son, the Prince of Wales, instant succession to the titles and prerogatives of royalty.

A historic pageant of age-old rituals confirmed the accession today in this Capital of the Empire of 450,000,000 subjects, acclaiming the new sovereign with the traditional words:

"The King is Dead, Long Live the King!"

The formal coronation of the new King, in accordance with precedent, will not take place until more than a year hence, when the mourning period will have ended. That will be early in May. George was crowned more than 13 months after his accession in 1910.

Five ceremonies in memory of the former monarch and to hail the new King filled today's crowded hours.

I. Removal of the body of King George from Sandringham House, the Norfolk royal residence, where he died from bronchial catarrh and heart weakness, to the nearby little parish church.

II. Session to London of King Edward for a meeting of his Privy Council at St. James' Palace at 4 p.m. (11 a.m., E.S.T.).

III. Proclamation of King Edward's accession to the rule by heralds from four historic points of London—Friary Court, St. James' Palace, Charing Cross, the Temple Bar and the steps of the Royal Exchange.

IV. Meeting of both Houses of Parliament at 6 p.m. (1 p.m. E.S.T.) to take a new oath of allegiance.

V. The first Prime Minister Baldwin's address to the nation at 9.30 p.m. (4.30 p.m. E.S.T.)

The crowds massing before Buckingham Palace, like the Norfolk villagers and countryfolk at the Sandringham Church, exemplified the sorrowing of a people.

The deep notes of "Great Paul" on the largest bell in St. Paul's Cathedral—boomed out from the "Parish Church of the Empire"—at set tolings at 9 a.m. (2 a.m. E.S.T.)

KING GEORGE WITH THE AGES

More than any monarch in history King George Fifth is mourned throughout the world, for the progress of mankind has made it so that no monarch who ever sat upon the British Throne was brought so close to the hearts and spirits of men and women as the ruler whose reign closed so peacefully last night at his country home in Norfolk. A world more closely bound by progress knew King George better than it knew his predecessors. And King George rose to this great opportunity and lived out a life of influence of unbounded importance in the far-flung empire and the rest of the world.

During the past few days however it was not so much the king as the simple, kindly, sincere, man whose fight with weakness and impending death called forth the prayers of millions that he be spared. For King George had earned the title of a good man, a sincere man, which could not fail to appeal to the hearts of all mankind. So today he is mourned and for days and for years he will be mourned as the great example of the man who coming into the highest human office so directs his life that the monarch and the man are one.

Last night there was the universal heartbeat of sympathy with the royal family who naturally knew the king as no one else could, who knew him, for the man who impressed the world with his high sense of honor, justice, and kindliness, must have been the ideal husband and father of the home, even that of a king. It was typical of him that he loved simplicity (though born of a race which fortunately still loves pageantry). He has his wish that his last hours would be spent in the countryside, and fate so decided that near the country village he breathed his last, while country folk knelt in prayer before the gates of the estate and before Buckingham Palace in London, praying that the king be spared. In the uttermost parts of the earth his subjects and others listened intently to radio broadcasting from England that the close of life came almost unnoticed in his sleep. In thousands of churches, from millions of hearts these prayers had been offered.

His late Majesty knew the sincerity of the people's tributes which grew more and more pronounced as they reign succeeded and reached a grand climax in the jubilee ceremonies of last May. His kindly words marked the man who was overcome with emotion as he spoke to his subjects from where by way of radio broadcast on that occasion.

Happy in his family, happy in the land and empire which, as he expressed it, were anxious for peace within and without, King George was indeed blessed. And he passed that blessing on to the people and its influence will go on forever and ever. This is the voice, not only of his own subjects but of public men throughout the world.

As a monarch, he came to the throne of the greatest of all the empires that history, with its infinite complexities and problems which require the deepest thought and infinite wisdom to direct. Into this sphere came the man who satisfied the demands of the vast duty resting upon him. He chose a way which has pleased his people, and the best way, he has brought the throne in a most subtle manner into the lives and hearts of the people. To other lands the British regal tradition may appear strange but as the limited monarchy develops in generation after generation it is showing that for the British people at least, there is no such form of government which has been devised by man. In the hands of King George, the monarchy though limited has grown in its hold on the people's hearts for the king has been a king in the fullest meaning of the word.

Most of his reign was profoundly marked by the war and the effects of that greatest war in history. The king carried his burden during these trying decades since 1914 and the Empire has to-day come the task. He had seen the Empire pass through those gloomy days and he saw the revival ahead. In the midst of tottering world conditions his kingship is firmer than ever in history, founded on love and good will. What an influence the King has been may only be dimly appreciated.

Today that unsettled world outside of the Empire pauses to place a tribute for the late British monarch, the most certain sign of his greatness The world and the Empire think of the sons of Sandringham and the grief-stricken royal family, and of that young man, called to the great kingship, who must perform official duties even as he weeps the passing of his noble father.

A LITTLE WORK

A little work, a little play
To keep us going—and so good-day!

A little warmth, a little light
Of love's bestowing—and so, good-night!

A little fun, to match the sorrow
Of each day's growing—and so, good-morrow.

A little trust that when we die
We reap our sowing! And so—good-bye!

TWO GOOD YEARS NOW AND THEN ANOTHER SLUMP is the prediction of a prominent businessman of the United States who points out that the new prosperity, present and prospective, is based upon replacements—folks have been going without new cars, new clothes and many other new things for some time awaiting the official closing of the depression. Now, confidence has returned, people are buying in surprising prosperity to the fore. At the same time says this prophet is the same mad rush for increased production, more installation of labor-saving machinery and displacement of human labor. Increased production all along the line and decreased powers of consumption through human labor displaced by machines—how long can that last? Looks as if this way would be to devote this two years to mending the fences, finding out what is wrong with the machinery which moves the world into good or bad times and to do all we can do if possible. The experience of the depression in the housing, feeding and clothing millions of unemployed and unemployable should guard us against the danger of allowing any adverse currents which may set in to militate against prosperity of a permanent nature. Canada for instance must have cheaper money, more stable and equitable currency, and fate so decided that near the country village he breathed his last, while country folk knelt in prayer before the gates of the estate and before Buckingham Palace in London, praying that the king be spared. In the uttermost parts of the earth his subjects and others listened intently to radio broadcasting from England that the close of life came almost unnoticed in his sleep. VAST EMPIRE SHARE GRIEF

The Royal Family, conversing in broken, hushed tones, slowly walked to their rooms. Its lights then were extinguished.

The royal physicians issued their final bulletin:

"Death came peacefully to the King at 11:55 p.m. in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, the Princess Royal, the Duke and Duchess of Kent. (Signed) Willard, Bertrand and Dawson."

Sir Frederick J. Williams, Sir F. Stanley Jeweett and Lord Dawson of Penn, who signed the last bulletin, had issued also the first on Friday. It told a startled empire that His Majesty's heart weakness must be viewed with disquiet.

SOLDIERS KNEW PRINCE AS 'NIBS'

Commander in Chief Praises Prince of Wales Warmly

The seemingly inexhaustible energy of the Prince was well taxed during the war. He was only 20 years old when he rallied cheers with Germany on the western front and for the next four years almost all of the days were spent within the sound of guns.

Even before he went to France his vigor, his tireless activity, amused hard-boiled old sergeants to whom he was, outside the range of their voices, simply "his nibs." He was a junior officer when the war was declared, but worked down from Cambridge, began drilling and training troops.

As a junior officer, the Prince crossed the channel with his comrades in arms when his battalion was ordered to the seat of war, and became a hard period of training in England. His ardent wish was to share to the full the dangers and hardships of his fellow Canadians, and, in a measure, this wish was gratified.

The Prince was given a staff appointment in which he acquitted himself most creditably and earned the warm praise of General Sir John French, and later the Earl of Ypres, who was then commander-in-chief of the British Expeditionary Forces. The Prince was highly necessary and good in his place but the Prince often expressed a wish to get well up into the front. Often he succeeded in doing so. Many stories are told of his unconventional visits to the trenches.

By the time he was gazetted as side-de-camp to Sir John French he had won complimentary mention from many sources for his devotion to duty.

VICTIMS BOTH GOOD DRIVERS

Officials of Company State Doyle and Devine Most Competent

"They were two of our most careful and valued drivers. We cannot imagine what happened and do not remember a case resembling it," stated Mr. Leslie Adam, superintendent of the Ontario Motor Coaches Limited yesterday after investigating the accident. Doyle was employed as driver operating at the Cemetery crossing and resulted in the deaths of Samuel Doyle and Mrs. Devine, Toronto drivers, who lost their lives when the truck they were driving, Mr. Wilson Collier and Mr. Doyle bound C.P.R. express train.

Mr. Adam accompanied Mr. Devine in putting anti-freeze into the ill-fated transport and Mr. Devine seemed high in spirits, when they left our Toronto warehouses shortly after midnight on Friday, Mr. Harry, automotive superintendent, of the Loblaw Company's fleet of trucks, according to the two officials, who came to Belleville to identify the drivers, Doyle and Devine and Mr. Doyle were two competent drivers, the former having been employed in the position of driving one of the larger Diesel motor trucks for over a year. Mr. Devine met death yesterday, had's splendid record behind him. Mr. Devine was having driven the third longest mileage for the Loblaw Company in three years, without having had an accident against his record. Both Mr. Doyle and Mr. Devine were to have received cash bonuses from their employers next week for their splendid records in safe driving.

Mr. Adam stated that longer portion of the canned goods and other groceries left strewn along the highway and ditches, for the Provincial Motor Traffic Officers Delaney and Evrine to gather up and check over, so that it would be perfectly in order for them to salvage the remainder of the load for the Toronto concern, a railway right-of-way. The release of the canned goods behind was later given by Mr. Adam, who announced, that the goods salvaged by the investigators would be taken back to Toronto and given over to the Toronto concern. The two bodies of the two drivers were prepared for burial at the Martin Funeral Home on Friday afternoon, and were later taken to Toronto.

Pinnacle Street Will Be Re-lighted With New System

"It is not necessary for me to say how keenly the council feels the death of our, beloved King and I would respectfully ask that heads be bowed in silence for two minutes," said Mayor Harry Hill in opening the first regular meeting of the council for 1936, on Monday evening. The business was conducted with dispatch and absolute quietness. Alderman Ben Safe was the chairman of the committee of the whole and of by-laws and those present were: Mayor Harry Hill, Aldermen Willis, Thompson, Arnott, Bateman, Jennings, Saragar, Clapp, Domenico, Ellis, Barlow, Armstrong, Lewis and Safa.

Light Pinnacle Street

Discussion was heard, when the recommendation was presented that a 250-candle-power lamp be added to the lighting system on Pinnacle street, in addition to the lights already on that street as a cost of $475.00, Alderman Willis stating that he was aware of the high tax rate last year and of an estimated increase for the present year of $9,000.00 a sum he was opposed to. Alderman Foster Ward said to come out of the total. "We are now adding another $475.00 and I think we should go slow if we wish to keep the tax rate at the level of last year," said Ald. Willis.

Alderman Domenico: "Are we going to sit here year after year and let the lighting system go? We have had a request for this light in the last three years of nearly $10,000.00 and I think this money could easily be spent on lighting."

Alderman Safe: "I would rather see the lights in the city than to have a lower tax rate if possible. The least this council can do is to stop the unnecessary expenditures. I do not blame Alderman Domenico for the stand he has taken over for a time."

Alderman Barlow: "I think Ald. Domenico is right in his contention. If Pinnacle Street is to be a parking street it should be well lighted."

Alderman Arnott: "I agree with Ald. Barlow. This street is going to be a parking artery and for the protection as well as for the car owners this street should be lighted."

The recommendation was then seconded, "that the action of the Finance Committee, allowing the City Clerk to choose his help in the Clerk's office be approved and that Miss Irene M. Keeler be appointed for one month on probation." Alderman Domenico stated that he opposed the recommendation in committee as the floor of the council, "I think," said the Alderman, "that the clerk should have the choosing of his help for the office and I have nothing against the young woman who is named in the recommendation but I think that the council should be given the opportunity to say who will be employed."

Alderman Barlow: "I agree with Ald. Domenico, but the motion passed.

Delegations Heard

Two delegations were heard before the deliberations of the council were commenced, the first being in regard to the vouchers for relief that he had submitted to the Welfare Committee and Mayor Lewis explained that the matter had been referred to the Provincial Government and that body had given an adverse ruling "but he had hopes that the matter would be adjusted and expressed the opinion that he was hopeful of the result.

Mr. Hart wanted to know why a transient was kept at a police station for a week and when there were Belleville citizens willing to undertake the care of such people why they could not be kept in the care of the Protection Committee. Alderman Armstrong explained that it was the policy of the police hire these men to do the work about the police quarters for the remuneration they get for the work out of their appropriation. Alderman Armstrong stated that Mr. Hart had done his work in a capable manner.

Name Committee

The Chairman of the Streets, Sewers and Public Works, Chairman of Fire, Alderman Arnott, the City Engineer and City Solicitor were named on the Claims Committee.

W. G. Springer made an offer of $500.00 for a lot on which the old Belleville Hotel stood. The recommendation was introduced, that the offer be accepted. Mr. Springer has made it the offer by Mr. Springer, that a warranty deed be given by the city and also that the lot be delivered in good condition. The council was opposed to making any repairs to the lot and they should be given the right of way could be given. On motion of Alderman Armstrong the recommendation was referred back to committee with the understanding, that Alderman Cumming, Mayor Mr. Springer, what was meant by good condition. The account for the injuries sustained by Harry Sayler some $40 was referred to the Claim's Committee.

A letter was received from the City Engineer respecting the grocery letter now being circulated by John Burgess on Dundas Street that, said it was recommended, that the whole matter be referred to the City Solicitor for a ruling. A request for a phone for Bruce Jones, 130 Murray Street, an employee of the city, was referred after a letter had been read from the City Engineer. A request from Albert Gervais for two gasoline pumps at 136 Dundas Street west was referred to a committee of Alderman, Bateman, Thompson and Jennings and the Finance Committee council will submit a report at an early meeting. A bill of $128.90 for macadamizing on the suburban roads from the Highway department was ordered paid.

Children to Use Hills

Dr. R. E. Flynn, chairman of the Welfare Committee of the Kiwanis Club requested that parts of Church, Crier, Octavia and Lingham Streets be blocked off to the children that use the hills for sleigh riding. This request was received with favor by the council and they will have every night in the week for the enjoyment. Under the head of enquiries, Alderman Barlow wanted to know if the insurance on the Fire Hall was sufficient to be secured for the merchants on the market square. He stated that a fire last report had been received. Mayor Hill stated, that the matter was sent the Underwriters about this matter and an inspector was sent to the city and there was every possibility, that an adjustment will be made in the near future.

Parking space in the city is at a minimum, the council agreed but on the suggestion of Alderman Barlow, Cumming, Bateman, Lewis, Saragar and Mayor Hill were appointed to investigate the areas, that could be used for parking, the suggestion, that some man be chosen to look after cars parked on streets and to report the report from Alderman Thompson, that the city was responsible for the snow but that some man should be appointed to make a comfortable living looking after the cars. Alderman Lewis was of the opinion that not only should the parking problem be looked into but that a survey should be made of the whole valley from from Camelford Road to the Bridge and that should be a broad plan and the council would have something definite to go by in the scheme.

Special Meeting

Alderman Jennings wished to know, what action was going to be taken with the Bell Phone Gas Company and when? And was advised, that a special meeting of the council would be held shortly at which the representatives of that company would be on hand to give all the information, that was required, before any by-laws were passed by the committee on by-laws, one to authorize the City Treasurer to borrow $14,000, which was required for the Public Utilities Commission and Traffic by-law. A clause was added limiting parking on the Victoria Street Upper Bridge to the Chamber of Commerce building and Bridge Street from the Upper Bridge to Pinnacle Street to one hour between the hours of 8.00 a.m. till 11.00 p.m. The council passed all three of these by-laws and their several stages. Under new business, the chairman of executive committee stated that he was prepared to name the chairman of the several boards and committees. There being no other business the council adjourned at ten-fifty.

Children's Colds Should Have This Safe Treatment

Two Generations' Proof of This External Treatment Free, Relieves Colds

IT AVOIDS CONSTANT "DOSING"

There's nothing like a child's cold to try a young mother. And two years of two generations have proved Vicks VapoRub the ideal external help. It avoids the risks of internal dosing. It acts at the seat of trouble. It's also something to relieve the misery.

Just rubbed on throat and chest at bedtime, VapoRub acts two ways to bring relief.

By its vapors, breathed through the skin, it's a poultice of pleasing, stimulating medication penetrating deep to the irritated bronchial tubes. At the same time, by body heat and breathed in deeply with every breath, it's continuously inhaling through the night, this combined vapor-medication action relieving the cough, easing tightness—seems difficult breathing—often checking the cold.

A Practical Guide for Mothers

Each year, more and more Practical Nurses, Doctors, Hospitals and doctor aids by Vicks Plan for Better Colds. Vicks Plan has been clinically tested by practical nurses in nursery and home to prove its worth. Send for booklet telling full details of the Plan in each package of Vicks VapoRub.

IRELAND GRIEVES OVER LATE KING

His Qualities Appealed Particularly Says De Valera's Paper

Dublin, Irish Free State, Jan. 21 (AP)—The Irish Free State received the news of King George's death with profound feelings of regret and strained relations with Great Britain were temporarily forgotten.

President de Valera's newspaper, the Irish Press, for the first time published a photograph of the late King with an editorial of tribute.

It said in part: "The throne always was noted for the simplicity of his home life. The Irish people realized that, as well as being constitutional monarch who for a quarter of a century wielded a potent influence over Europe, he was an ideal husband and father. Simple ties which make an irresistible appeal to the Irish."

President de Valera telegraphed to the state messages:

"On behalf of the government of the Irish Free State, I desire to express to Your Majesty our sincere sympathy with you and the Royal Family in your bereavement."

The Queen replied she was "deeply touched."

Bank of Montreal Issues Booklet

There is much about bank methods and practices that is a mystery to the ordinary man and woman. They know about the mechanism of cheques, but they know little about numerous other services which the banks are prepared to give them.

To enlighten the public on the subject, the Bank of Montreal has just issued a new edition of its booklet "Banking by Mail and How You May Use It." Prepared for the purpose of setting forth the many ways in which the bank can serve the individual", this booklet is really a comprehensive manual on Canadian banking.

One of the main points it provides for the reader is the extraordinary range of services which the bank offers to the public. Something like a score of these services is listed and the only basis for selection explained in language that is easily understood, but the correct methods of procedure are also described.

In the latter respect the booklet is illustrated by reproductions of various bank forms correctly filled out, and each point at the difference between "Order" and "Bearer" cheques are explained and illustrated.

Among the subjects dealt with is that of borrowing money from the bank—a subject that is of timely interest and of great importance. The booklet may be had for the asking at any branch of the Bank of Montreal.

"POET LAUREATE OF WEST" VISITS CANADIAN CLUB

Edna Jaques Delights With Address on "My Country in Poetry, Song"

"My Country in Poetry and Song," was the subject on the Women's Canadian Club yesterday afternoon, carried out in songs of poetry and quiet humour to life as it is lived by homesteaders in the West, by Edna Jaques, "Poet Laureate of the West," who has caught the indomitable cheerful spirit of the Westerner, and shown how to recognize defeat but dauntlessly look forward to the promise, that every Spring brings.

Edna Jaques (Mrs. W. E. Jamieson of Victoria, B.C.) a popular Canadian poet has gained her inspiration from the true and homely things of life, from the beauty and the hardships of Western life, from the unique spirituality of her nature. Members of the Club were delighted to hear her recount, her humours and her sincerity, through the poems she delivers, of the thousands of prairie homesteaders, who courageously are facing the hardships of the exacting life.

Leaving Ontario as a little girl when the family moved into the "Northwest ferer," Miss Jaques recalled the first days of prairie life. "The only thing you could see in any direction—were sunrise and sunset—grass—and us." No day was long enough for children to play, and they ran free and wild over the unlimited spaces about them.

Home Just Handy

"Our pioneer home was like hundreds of other homesteads. Just handy that's all. If you wanted to borrow the loan of an egg, a cup or the bedroom you just stayed right where you were," the poet speaker. "But when this same home was used for Sunday services, it suddenly grew into a shining room of fellowship and song."

Memories long forgotten inspired lovely little poems, which were read by the author, and the sheeked grandmother was remembered in "Homebodies;" the girls looking for lovers inspired "Homesteaders" and the generous nature of her countrymen in "Kindly Eyes." "Kindly Eyes" so beautiful did Edna Jaques find them, that she told she would never care to die and a poem on that theme was called "Requiem for Earth."

The little poem of her book "My Kitchen Window" inspired the audience to be a frame for the far-off, cheerless prairie, mountains and the clouds or for the neighbour peering through the window. "Busy" a worker as she paused from kitchen tasks.

"People so often say to me," remarked the speaker, "do you're in the country, why don't you write some? It is a flight from start to finish. But when I'm in the country with you, you'll stick, and starve like a man."

Miss Jaques told of some of her experiences visiting Canadian Clubs in the West, and of meeting Dawson Creek five hundred miles north of Edmonton, the collection of twelve or fifteen new shacks at the end of steel. But the people were charming, even if it included two dinners, was heart warming. She recounted the story of her trip back and forth from Edmonton, a journey one for her listeners. The return from Dawson Creek was in a freight car, "the most hardship in travelling a horse dealer. There was little room for anyone.

"Where were you born," he asked, "Ontario, Collingwood, Ontario," said Miss Jaques.

"Lady", said the horse dealer, "There is no place like it." And that there was no conversation.

The audience was delighted with the spirit of these hardy pioneers who "carried on" and the tribute which was captured by the poet in her "Prairie Women Canada."

Mrs. H. Williams, president of the Club, thanked the speaker and the speaker expressed the thanks of the members for the delightful afternoon with the "Poet Laureate of the West."

Province Joins in Mourning Flags Hoisted to Half-Staff

By the Canadian Press

Ontario joined with other provinces today in mourning for King George. Church bells tolled in communities throughout the province.

Public functions were postponed out of respect to the beloved monarch. City councils and public bodies passed resolutions of sympathy for the bereaved Royal Family and adjourned their meetings.

When news of the death of the King reached Walkerton last night, Rev. Father Edward F. Goetz, rector of Our Lady of Help Church, rushed to the huge bell in the belfry himself as the sexton lived some miles away. The bell tolled solemnly and the church doors were opened. Messages of sympathy were being forwarded to the Royal Family and representative in Canada.

Flags at half mast, black squares in many windows, royal purple draping portraits of His Majesty in schools, churches and many other places were Brantford's outward indication of mourning. Girls at work and others were closed. Messages of sympathy were being forwarded to the Royal Family.

Before the opening of the session of Division Court in Kingston, Judge G. M. Derochie, of Belleville paid tribute to the late King, referring feelingly to the passing of Britain's beloved ruler.

Judge Derochie then announced that he could preside at court as he would have to take an oath of allegiance to the new King. Edward VIII, and the oath was accordingly administered by Crown Attorney T. J. Rigney, K.C.

Simple and Serious Devotion Extolled by Press of Great Britain

LONDON, Jan. 21.—(CP Cable)—The British Press editorially mourned the passing of King George.

The Times: The lands and seas encircling the British Crown mourn the man who bore with him the heavy responsibilities the responsibilities confided to him by his brother's unexpected death who bore them with simple devotion and obligation throughout a reign extended as never before a great cares and great issues.

The Manchester Guardian: When George was called to the throne politics were more bitter than for generations called for three special qualities—judgment, modesty and courage. He showed fear, a slip of discretion or dignity, a trace of the temper that Victoria showed of the State.

KING'S NAME CHANGED TONIGHT

Yeomen of Guard Ritual of Past 800 Years Altered Slightly

London, Jan. 21 (CP)—Tonight the grim old tower of London will alter the impressive ritual carried out every night for the last eight centuries.

At ten o'clock to the roll of drums and a file of yeomen of the guard in quaint Tudor uniforms, have so often walked beside the king's coach on the opening of parliament and on other high state occasions, will march out and take part in the ceremony of "locking".

The locking parade will march toward the lieutenant's lodgings.

"Who goes there?" challenges the sentry.

"The keys," replies the yeoman guard.

"Whose keys?" demands the sentry.

"King George's keys."

Thereupon the keys are delivered to the lieutenant.

"God save the king!" cries the lieutenant.

Then, responds the guard.

But tonight George will be altered to Edward.

Time-Honored Ritual

In past centuries the ritual has broken upon the ears of queens, bishops and statesmen doomed to imprisonment in the Tower. The same sounds came in our own day to brave men sentenced for espionage who had to face the firing squad at daybreak.

Silent, bare-headed crowds today watched the changing of the guard at Buckingham Palace and at St. James Palace. There were no bands and the usual ceremonies were reduced to a minimum. Colors were draped with crepe and officers wore mourning bands.

Under ordinary circumstances and when the court is in London the changing of the guard is a brilliant early day ceremony attracting hosts of visitors, especially from overseas.

Tonight the customary number of guardsmen with official tokens of mourning will march from the guard the Bank of England, a custom prevailing through two centuries.

New Sovereign Seen by Many Here

Many local residents who watched the new King Edward the Eighth when he passed through Belleville as the Prince of Wales several years ago The beloved Prince was a familiar figure here and he was always waved in his democratic manner to the hundreds and hundreds of loyal subjects who thronged the streets of the south station platform. The Prince stopped only for a few moments that day, but sufficiently long enough to allow Belleville a glimpse of the future beloved Prince of Wales.

JUNIORS DEFEAT GANANOQUE 6-4 IN SMART GAME

Requires Ten Minutes of Overtime to Accomplish Feat

LACK COMBINATION

Staging a third period rally to knot the count, the Belleville juniors combined their offence to defeat the Gananoque kids by the score of 6 to 4 in an overtime O.H.A. junior fixture at the Belleville arena before some 800 fans last evening. Trailing by the count of 4 to 2 against them the local "Redmen" headed for the speedy Gananoque juniors and held the visitors from the scoring sheet after the middle canto. After knotting the count early in the third stanza the Thomasites went in to win a home-and victory in the overtime period when they notched the winning goals and annexed victory. The ice was fast and clear which resulted in speedy hockey as the games developed. The visitors appeared wearing mourning on their sleeves and the local fans knew, however, the game is respect, to the late King George V.

Presenting a fast skating front line the Gananoque kids carried the play for the better part of the two periods, as the locals seemed unable to get organized and played a casual brand of hockey, but once the Junior "Redmen" started to get going, however, a different tale was told and their ability to score proved the answer in the latter stages of the contest as they carried the play.

Locals Slow

Bill-Hastie, shifty centreman for the Gananoque kids, stood out as the individual star of the game with his clever stick handling and skating ability. Hastie banged two of his team-mates' shots home for counters on individual efforts. Wheeler on the Belleville team also showed to good advantage and was a valued player with Hastings, Mallows and Taylor, following in close order. Hastings netted two counters for the locals to lead the Belleville goal getters in the scoring bill. Pepper looked best of the playing squad, over the boards of Belleville. Thomas, Tompkins, Wannamaker and Howie all gave good accounts of themselves in action and materially assist the locals in victory. Munro, Mallows and Taylor from Wellington, giving a brilliant display of goal tending for the Belleville nets. For the first two periods Munro stood out as the individual Belleville star with his numerous miraculous saves. The victory advances the Belleville lads into full possession of second place in their group standing.

The Play

Gananoque opened the pastime with their defence of Munro, Hastie and Thomas handling out frequent body-checks. This slowed the locals down considerably from the out-set. Mc-Donald opened the scoring, when he took Pepper's pass and drove home an open shot. Due to disorganization the local team showed nothing but a winning team at this point, failing to effect by Bill Storms resulted in the Gananoque kids adding another counter and as Bill Pepper raced the length of the ice he was tripped and by tested Naylor Storms was in position to fire the rubber and the period ended with the score of 3 to 1 in favour of Belleville.

Three Tallies

The second stanza was all Gananoque as Harding, Hastie and Wheeler's pass and Bill Hastie slipped his shot by goalie Munro to set a winning team at this point. Belleville effort by Bill Storms resulted in the Belleville kids getting a

Dale Plays The Game

—BY—

Ann Forester

As she descended the brass-edged stairs into the bare lobby she saw curious glances turned on her from the lounging men. Without the support of the rats of the company she felt a new diffidence. She mustn't stay here in this commercial hotel. Night after breaking she must look around for some place to board. A room in a private home. It would look better when she applied for work. She started her search directly after leaving the hotel.

But the end of two hours found her hurt and bewildered and not one inch nearer her goal. Colt City was not a suspicious town as a rule. It was almost aggressively tolerant and modern as befitted a county seat the population of which had increased from a bare thousand to well over four thousand in three years. But Dale had started out on the wrong foot. The Primrose Bride had been well received by the men of the town but there had been a dearth of the gentle sex in the audience. It is a truism to say that men manufacture public opinion and women apply it; the men had said that The Primrose Bride was "some show!"—and it with one eye closed and tongue in the cheek; as a consequence, the relic of the departed vaudeville had brazenly elected to remain behind, found it impossible to find a boarding place.

When Dale applied at the white house on the corner with the brass Rooms and Board sign, she was confronted by a formidable lady in a bungalow apron who eyed her suspicant as though she suspected her of coming to steal the table silver. She wasn't takin' boarders that summer, the pink lady said shortly. They made too much work. Dale might try Mrs Beebee on the next block. But Mrs Beebee, her sharp black eyes scanning the girl shrewdly, spoke vaguely of some mysterious niece she expected down from Fresno. The keeper of the Men's Home said flatly that she didn't want no "females" around. Then, touched by the tired droop of the slender figure in the white sport dress, added in a more gentle tone, that the girl might try Mis Hemple down by the tracks. But Mis Hemple had all she could do now, what with the school teacher. And the school teacher—looking just out of sight around the bend of the hall—said, soothing, that Mis Hemple had a nerve, putting it all on the girl, what she'd just said about bleached hair!

The words reached the girl, who was going wearily down the steps and in spite of the roundup sun which was already beating cruelly down on her, Dale felt a cold chill pass over her.

CHAPTER 5.
COLD CHARITY

The last place of call had rather dampened Dale's ardor for hunting a room. Better get work. When she could tell them suspicious local women, where she was working, things would run smoother.

Down Main Street again, where the hot concrete burned through the thin soles of her pumps and the spike heels sank into the soft asphalt at the corners. She was wandering through a totally new world. Was it only this morning the show had left town? Was she with Phil this time yesterday....?

The drug store was on her direct course. In the shade of the awning Dale stopped to powder her warm face and repeat her lines so as not to become fluminghy aware that the group of men lounging in a pool room across the street were admiringly watching her.

Her heart sank as she asked the proprietor for work: He was a meek little man with a shiny bald head. It was apparent that he gave the only half his attention. The balance was tied back on the acid-faced female—only too evidently his wife—behind the stationary counter. Though no words were spoken, Dale knew that no blonde redhead was going to work in Ben Hendrick's drug store—not while Mrs. Hendrick knew about it!

Dale's mouth was drooping as she came out into the glare of Main Street. The drug store had been her chief hope. She crossed to the Colt City Emporium. Three sallow clerks behind the counters watched her as she spoke to Mr. Harry Troutt, son of the proprietor and manager of the store. Mr. Harry Troutt's boldly glowing eyes said that he would take the cute little blonde to dinner but Mr. Harry Troutt's careful tongue said, diplomatically, that at the present time there was no vacancy.

The same story when she climbed the brass-edged stairs of Colt City's Emporium Block. Dale's heart sank; her ruined kid pumps by now. She began to her a herself for the hot tired tears from springing to her eyes.

Where was her large confidence of last night? And where—her spirit sneered—did people get such stuff about the cold-hearted city and the friendly little country town? In the city you might have been turned down, of course, but it would have been impersonal, indifferent. She would never have been aware of the booming whispers she left in her wake.

At three o'clock the unbearable heat sent her limping back to the hotel. The Colt City House was dark and fairly cool under its awnings. The blank hotel room, in which her battered trunk was the only familiar object, was a refuge, if a dingy one.

Dale pulled off her hot tight hat and tossed it on the bed. She struggled out of the white silk dress which fell like a coat of mail and slipped into the sleazy blue satin negligee. It was a blessed relief to push the hair back from her wet forehead. A blessed relief to be free from prying eyes.

But as she was about to lie down a soft tap at the door drew her head to open it, wonderingly.

In the dim light of the hall she could make out the weedy figure of the night clerk. His white smile was meaningful. His words were glib.

"Now you come in an' thought I'd come up an' see if there was anything you wanted."

"Thank you—there's nothing," she told him shortly.

"Oh..... You going to stay?"

"Yes."

His smile grew wider. "Then we got to make things nice for you. I can get a car any time I want it. How are you fixed for a boggie ride?"

The brown eyes watching him, narrowed. "About as good as those of a certain 'very' warm reptile I'm dressing!"

He slipped in a foot as she attempted to close the door and his smile became tinged with a sneer.

"Oh, is that so—"

"Near enough so," rethread Dale evenly, "for you to take my word for it!"

He tried to brazen it out, "Aw, now, Blondie what's the use of you trying to rile me? I guess we understand each other pretty well, you and me—"

He made a sudden movement toward her but the girl had slammed the door and turned the key. She stood inside the room, her head pressed hard against the door, her cheeks crimson as she listened to his footsteps going down the hall.

The history of that first day was the history of the rest of the week. Very apparently Colt City neither needed nor wanted Dale Evans. The end of the week still found the girl in the dubious Colt City House.

Not that the little town meant to be unkind. It was too new, too raw to be other than self-conscious. The men out-numbered the women three to one and what few females there were, were divided into two classes. Either you belonged to the obviously respectable element in the town or you were connected with the mysterious district at the north end across the bridge of Dry Creek, his slim blonde girl in the showy silk clothes fitted into neither class. The respectable ladies were quick to band together, warily eyeing the intruder who might be planning to under-mine their own hardly won superiority.

And each day the small supply of money in Dale's white kid handbag melted with startling rapidity. The hotel dining room became a luxury which she could not afford at meal times. Quickly the Greek oyster grotto was slipping into the same class. Looking for cheaper food, Dale found a lunch counter where the end of Main Street dwindled into the State Highway. It was a small open-front shack where a sign hanging motionless in the sunshine told the world that here, Sandy the Waffle Kid, himself presided.

To anyone passing and looking into the place there could be no doubt that the Waffle Kid himself was officiating at the stove at one end of the counter. The reddish-brown eyebrows and the sparse lashes proclaimed it. The thatch of sandy hair and the curly sandy hairs on his forearms, even the powder of freckles on his thin French face asserted it.

Dale had trudged down to the railroad station on a tip which did not materialize. Dizzy with heat, faint with hunger, she slumped down suddenly on one of the stools and watched the world reel about her.

"All in, aren't you, sister," he said in a kindly voice. "A treat and somethin' to eat is what you want. What'll it be—scrambled eggs an' some waffles?"

Dale nodded without raising her head. She had pulled her hat off her tumble hair and sat, chin sunk in hand, too depressed to answer.

Sandy drew a cup of coffee from his shining percolator. Deftly he broke an egg in the pan, scooping up the adhering thread with a neat flourish of half of the shell. As he looked over at the yellow head and drooping white neck visible to him, the Waffle Kid's gaze was troubled.

CHAPTER 6.
SANDY—THE WAFFLE KID

Food and coffee—above all, the rest in the shade of the lunchroom awning, brought new strength to Dale. The Waffle Kid leaned on the cash register watching her sat, his reddish-brown eyes betraying a lively curiosity, which he had the tact to check for the time being. Before the girl had finished an auto-stage drew up before the place in a cloud of dust.

"Hey, Sandy—" called the driver. "Got something for these folks to eat? Wilson's lent servin' lunches no more an' it's past feedin' time at the hotel."

Scenes From the Life of Edward VIII, New Monarch of the Empire

These are shown pictures from the life of His Most Excellent Majesty Edward the Eighth, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India. Born June 23, 1894, King Edward ascended the throne on the death of King George V, who died January 20. Edward is the eldest of four sons; his full name is Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David. As Prince of Wales, Britain's new King was known and loved the world over; he was called Britain's "happy bachelor", and his life has been replete with incident. He is perhaps Britain's most democratic King. As Prince of Wales, his travels took him to every corner of the globe—from his Alberta ranch, to the heart of Africa and Indian jungles. His amazing versatility made him expert in many sports, and his tremendous vitality and energy kept him constantly on the move. As sportsman, as Prince, as man, and now as King, his motto has ever been: "I am just as you; please treat me as an equal". Since he reached marriageable age, his name has been many times romantically linked with scores of women. But he has never married and ascends the throne as a bachelor King. The new monarch is shown in CENTRE from a recent portrait of him taken in Scottish uniform. In the layout he is shown. TOP ROW, LEFT to RIGHT, in flying togs. As Prince of Wales, he was many times warned, finally forbidden to fly his own aeroplane, although he is an expert pilot. The next picture shows him as a boy of eleven from a photo taken in 1905. Next to the centre portrait, he is shown in American Indian garb from a picture taken during his visit to his Alberta ranch in 1926. EXTREME RIGHT shows him with the late King George at Epsom Downs. Both King Edward and his father were enthusiastic race fans. In the BOTTOM ROW, LEFT to RIGHT, the new King is first shown as a business man. Despite his wanderings, he was most attentive to his personal affairs, and is shown here with two secretaries. During the Great War, as Prince of Wales, he achieved tremendous popularity in France, where he took an active part in the conflict; many times coming under fire. He is shown from a photo taken in France, in uniform as a lieutenant. He is next pictured on horseback in his uniform as Colonel of the Welsh Guards. Always an enthusiastic horseman, as Prince of Wales he took part in many horse races, resulting frequently in tumbles. So often was he injured that he was ordered to forsake his favorite sport. In the fourth picture he is shown clearing a hedge. INSET in CENTRE is one of the most interesting recent pictures ever taken of King Edward showing him leaning over the rail at an English race track just as anxious about his choice as the ordinary people with whom he mingled. At EXTREME RIGHT, he is shown again from a picture taken when he visited the United States in 1924. He was at that time hailed by the entire population of the republic. He is almost as popular in the United States as he is in Canada, and he has always been, in effect, as much a part of the union as he is of the empire.

KING'S NEIGHBORS MOURN AT BIER IN TINY CHAPEL

White Floral Cross From Queen Only Flowers on Casket

RURAL SIMPLICITY

Family to Hold Memorial Service at Sandringham

By CHARLES P. NUTTER
(Copyright 1936 By The Associated Press)

Sandringham, England, Jan. 22.—Saddened East England country folk mourned today at the bier of King George V, lying in the tiny, flag-draped chapel of the church on the Sandringham royal estate.

Norfolk neighbors of the late ruler filed slowly past the royal casket, on which rested a single white floral cross from the Queen Mother Mary.

Four sentinels of the rustic estate, dressed simply in black suits, stood immobile as the four sisters of the royal house of the local residents bade farewell to the man and monarch they know as friend.

The final obsequies for the Sandringham folk were carried out in a crisp winter scene as pale sunshine broke intermittently through dusky skies to light the chapel.

A half-dozen Norfolk constables scrutinized each visitor to see that he was wearing either a black tie or a mourning armband.

Rural Simplicity

The mourners entered through the rear door of the church and passed slowly up the centre aisle of the chapel, which seats scarcely 100 persons, past the King's plain oaken coffin.

Residents who had known the King all his life, wept openly.

Women's handkerchiefs fluttered as they dried their eyes.

The whole scene presented a study in rural simplicity, in keeping with the surroundings in which the late monarch lived on his country estate.

The coffin rested on a rich mortuary pall, bearing the monograms of the Duke of Clarence, George's dead brother, and Queen Alexandra, his late mother.

Tonight the church will be closed to the public as the royal family gathers for its memorial service.

Keep Lonely Vigil

For today, however, the Queen Mother expressly ordered the church should be opened to the public.

Throughout the night, gamekeepers and foresters of Sandringham Estate, near the bleak coast, 100 miles northeast of London, kept lonely vigil beside the body.

The guardians wore tough cord-uroy trousers, leather coats, the pomp and glitter of uniforms and display being left until the body reaches London late tomorrow.

The widowed Queen walked twice through the rain and sleet last night from the royal residence to the village church, to be again at the side of her husband.

The final time, dressed in deep mourning and carrying an umbrella for protection from the storm, she followed humbly behind the coffin of the King in the half mile journey from the death chamber to the church.

After returning to Sandringham House by automobile, she went back to the church soon after, late in the evening, to kneel in prayer before the bier.

Two other women of the royal household accompanied the Queen on her second journey over the path she often walked happily with the King.

The guards withdrew this time as the sorrowing widow advanced alone to the bier, where she knelt for seven minutes in prayer.

King Edward, entering fully into his new duties of state, planned to fly back to Sandringham this afternoon, weather permitting.

Form of Mourning Outlined to Members

Ottawa, Jan. 22 (CP)—Cancellation of all social activities until further notice, half-staffing of flags, the draping of charters and buildings and the wearing of mourning by members is requested by General Alex Ross, Dominion President of the Canadian Legion, to all provincial commands today. The insignia of mourning, it is suggested, should take the form of a crepe rosette behind the organization's badge, worn in the lapel of the coat.

In his communication Mr. Bowler declared that Empire headquarters in London of the British Empire Service League, of which King Edward VIII. is Grand Patron, will undertake a fitting Canadian League tribute there. In Canada members of the organization are requested to lend assistance and to participate in all services to the memory of the late King George.

Text of Baldwin's Speech

London, Jan. 22 (CP)—Following is the text of Prime Minister Baldwin's speech to the Empire Tuesday night:

"After he had served his own generation by the will of God, he fell asleep and was 'gathered to his fathers.'

"These words kept recurring to me in the watches of last night, for if there was one thing that our King had done, it was to serve his own generation by the will of God and because of that the news of the death of His Majesty, when it came, has been heard everywhere with personal grief—not only in this country but through the vast empire over which he ruled, and it has flew far beyond its borders. To famous men, all the earth is a sepulchre.

"It is less than a month ago that the voice now silent was heard speaking to the world. The King addressing his subjects, a father seated with his family, speaking to his people and members of his wider family, words of wisdom, courage and deep human sympathy.

"As members of the family, we are mourning him today. There must be millions who feel as I do that a wise and loving friend and counsellor has been taken from us; and for long the world will seem a poorer and a colder place without him. The tones of that well-known voice are echoing in our ears today as our thoughts turn to the widowed Queen and the bereaved family.

Every Heart Is Seen

"I do want to say a word to you about Queen Mary, for I know that every heart in the Empire is sore for her this night. It often seemed to me that in a married life so perfect, so happy, as theirs was, there has to come that inevitable day when one is taken and the other is left, and one of the two must face the pilgrimage to the end alone.

"There are millions of hands, which, if they could reach the Queen, would be stretched out to her and tears of sympathy shared with her. And it must be some comfort to her, though we cannot tell her that, to know of that feeling and she must know it from the manifestations of that wonderful Jubilee summer.

"But may not this be a comfort to her as it has been a comfort to others, that after all the one who is left is really carrying the cross for the one who is gone before. If she were not suffering today, he would be, and she is bearing what might have been his sorrow for his sisters, perhaps between 60 and 70 years of age. You know only too link that is—the common memories of childhood. As we grow older men and women get older—few loses that strike so intimately as the contemporary collections with their share of common memories.

And it was no ordinary bond, no formal bond, that united the King and his sister. They were devoted to each other, and his Majesty, if he is spared to see people who love her. I am sure that we, all of us, all our people, will love her in whatever way they can, how close she is to their hearts, and how they will treasure her, not only for the King's sake, but for her own.

He Keeps for Him

As to the King, what can I say in a few minutes and within twenty-four hours of this shattering blow? I think I may dwell for these few minutes on the King as I had known him during this last year, and try to picture him as one who has borne the responsibilities of his position during perhaps the most difficult quarter of a century, in which a monarch has ever sat on the throne. There was no respite for him during those twenty-five years. The whole world has been in a state of commotion, and never there seemed to come to him any period when he could look ahead for two or three years and feel that all would be peace and quiet, and nothing in the world could come between him and his people's troubles.

"The world has been what a great man in the sixteenth century called in a raving world," and he played his part in it gallantly to the end.

"I do feel most thankful that after that illness of his six years ago he was spared to see that Jubilee year. He and his ministers and his doctors, and all who knew much about these things felt some apprehension as to the strain that he might have to undergo in attending the various ceremonies and functions that belonged to such a time. But all our fears were belied, for there seemed to be given to him a special strength to come through those weeks.

"I rejoice to think that he—modest as ever, diffident as to his own powers, often wondering what his people thought of what he had done and tried to do for them—often think that it was a most wonderful experience for him to see and have brought home to him that all that he had done had sunk deep into their hearts and the occasion that Jubilee was the occasion they all embraced to throw off that shyness so characteristic of him, to show him openly and without shame that they were proud of him as their King, that they loved him as a King.

The Effect on Him

"The effect on him, I think, was great. He never referred to it without emotion, but he was strengthened soundly. He accepted that tribute with a thankful humility. I am indeed thankful that he lived to see it, and that during those last months he knew what he meant to his people. But we knew that there was no strength to spare. To come through that last illness had taken from him every reserve of strength that he had. We knew that it must age him at times, and I used to contrast his luck with the luck of a politician—for we can all look forward at age if we live to ourselves. But the King's burden is very tired. It goes on all through the years, and it goes on with age, and the only release from it is death.

"And then, again, you remember the death of his sister. Of many who are listening to me tonight they may be the brothers and the sisters, perhaps between 60 and 70 years of age. You know only too link that is—the common memories of childhood. As we grow older men and women get older—few loses that strike so intimately as the contemporary collections with their share of common memories.

And it was no ordinary bond, no formal bond, that united the King and his sister. They were devoted to each other, and his Majesty, if he is spared to see people who love her. I am sure that we, all of us, all our people, will love her in whatever way they can, how close she is to their hearts, and how they will treasure her, not only for the King's sake, but for her own.

WHERE BODY OF KING WILL LIE IN STATE—Hallowed by memories of centuries of his forebears, the body of King George V will lie in state in Westminster Abbey (seen above). Hundreds of thousands of British subjects will pay homage here to their dead monarch.

"How is The Empire?"

There is one thing that I think I can tell you all with no impropriety. Although much, and most indeed, of what passes near the end is sacred and none of us have desire or right to inquire into what happens at those times, yet I think I may tell you this. The King was having brief intervals of consciousness, and each time he became conscious it was some kind inquiry or kind observation of some one, some words of gratitude for kindness shown.

But he did say to his secretary when he sent for him: "How is the Empire?"

An unusual phrase in that form, and the secretary said: "All is well, sir, with the Empire."

And the King smiled and relapsed once more into unconsciousness.

And it was simply this—that during all that time, subconsciously or just coming to the surface, was the same love for his people, care for their well-being here and throughout the world, for that family to whom he spoke last Christmas, and the thought of them was with him to the end.

King George, it is true, inherited his position on the Throne, but he won his own way to the hearts of his people. Behind the pomp and the pageantry incidental to his great position, he labored night and day in that high station to which God had called him. The doing of his duty to the utmost of his ability was the guiding principle of his life. Great power which corrupts weak natures ennobled our King's character and made him abhor pomposition and will and energy to his duty to his duty to his country.

Excellent Memory

He brought the disposition that is lovely in private life into the service and conduct of the Commonwealth and not only in virtue of his office, but in virtue of his person, was he the first gentleman in the land. As the knowledge of the King's complete dedication to duty grew and spread as his reign proceeded, so did the respect of his people turn into reverence, and reverence into love. It literally is true that he won their hearts, and during the Jubilee, they made that manifest to him.

This is the truth we must bear in mind as we think of the son who succeeds to the Throne and upon whom has now fallen one of the heaviest burdens that can rest upon the shoulders of fallible and mortal man. We can best honor the noble memory of King George by gathering round and sustaining the young King whom for so long we have delighted to know as the Prince of Wales.

All eyes are upon him as he advances to his father's place. And while he is no stranger to public duty, he is now summoned to face responsibility in more or less measure, more continuous than any he has hitherto been asked to undertake. He comes to them in the prime of his power and already known throughout the length and breadth of his Empire. His great gifts of mind and heart he is now called upon to consecrate to his people. His talents an example of steady conduct, or virtue, of wisdom and of endurance.

King George's reign was marked by far-reaching constitutional and Parliamentary changes without precedent in our long history. He earned the loyalty and respect of all parties in the State, and age did not. He hands down to his son the Throne he himself received from his father and he hands it down with its foundations strengthened, its moral authority enhanced and its dignity enhanced. It is an incomparable and awe-inspiring inheritance.

The young King knows the conditions we all suffer from. He knows that he commands not only allegiance, but love and the full understanding, the affection and the prayers of the countless multitudes of his subjects not in this land only but May God guide him at this and God save the King!

Marcel Regnier May Be Laval's Successor

Paris, Jan. 22 (AP)—The name of Minister of Finance Marcel Regnier was the thrust into political prominence in controversy today as a possible successor to Premier Laval.

Laval's resignation together with that of seven Radical Socialist Ministers was expected momentarily, closing the seventh ministry of the 100th cabinet of the third Republic.

Political circles regarded Regnier as more acceptable to the Rightists in the present crisis than Laval because of his strong advocacy of a stable currency.

Other observers injected the name of Senator Albert Farraut, former Premier and veteran statesman, into discussions of Laval's successor.

Regnier, formerly Minister of the Interior in the 1934 cabinet of Premier Pierre Etienne Flandin, has been a defender of Laval's decree laws and the policy of credit expansion.

Confirmed Succession

The "Faith and Constant Obedience" of all his subjects were pledged to the new sovereign, confirming his succession to the throne of his late father, the 70-year-old King George V.

The words of the centuries-old proclamation were carried throughout the nation and the empire, to the new King's 500,000,000 subjects throughout a quarter of the world.

Wireless, the modern conqueror of space, was used for the first time in such a British Royal ceremony.

The Royal Standard, which had not flown over Buckingham Palace since King George and Queen Mary left for Sandringham before Christmas, then was run up over the Palace, a quarter of a mile down the Mall.

The Earl Marshal, His Grace the Duke of Norfolk, and the Queen's King of Arms remained within St. James's Palace in attendance on King Edward, who decided to resign to Sandringham later today to join the newly-made Queen Mother Mary.

The remainder of the official proclamation party, in the horse-drawn carriages accompanied by a contingent of lifeguards, drove at through Trafalgar Square in a stately procession to Charing Cross and Temple Bar Fetes

There the proclamation was read a second time by the Windsor Herald, Alfred Trego Butler, Esquire. Down the Strand the proceeds then moved to the Temple Bar ancient boundary of the City of London. The proclamation was read for the third time.

"Who comes there?" called the advance guard of the Lord Mayor of London. Silver trumpets sounded to meet the glittering cavalcade of heralds.

The Officer of Arms who demands entrance to the city to proclaim the King," replied the pursuivants for the heralds.

The silken cord barrier dropped and the pursuivant advanced to meet the Lord Mayor crying, "The King is dead! Long live the King!"

The Lord Mayor joined the procession on Ludgate Hill surrounded St. Paul's Cathedral, to the steps of the Royal Exchange in the heart of London's business district.

The London ceremony was completed by the pulpit with the third reading of the proclamation.

The ceremony also was read in the Dominions, in India, in Northern Ireland, the Colonies, the Isle of Man, Jersey and the various counties and municipal boroughs throughout the United Kingdom.

Immediately after the St. James Palace ceremony Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin proceeded to Buckingham Palace, where he was received by the new King.

Former Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, Lord President of the Council, presided at a cabinet meeting held in No. 10 Downing Street, historic government headquarters in the absence of Baldwin.

KING EDWARD REIGNS

A new sovereign sits on the throne of Britain and of the vastest empire in world history. King Edward Eighth, son of the late King George Fifth. No empire which ever came under the sway of Alexander the Great of Macedon or of the Caesars of Imperial Rome could approach in extent this expanse of lands in every clime, populated by people of almost every race, and in the immensity of the task which it imposes upon the new king-emperor. Half a billion subjects owe him allegiance, about one quarter of the earth's population. This is one of the heritages which King Edward has received from his father, those other heritages being the more intangible and indefinable type, such as the quality of rule, the sense of duty and responsibility. And finally there is that heritage, his own individuality.

Today with the age-old rites and ceremonies before St. James's Palace and in the British capital proclaimed the accession to his people while documents were read in all British lands proclaiming him ruler.

So steps into the scene at one of the most serious moments of history a young man approaching middle age, who has been under the finest discipline and tutelage for a king who has to reign in a world of change. The British constitution was changed in King George's reign and it is of that flexible nature which alone will meet the changes which face the world. King Edward has been trained in the school of his royal father and has seen the downfall of the reaction to King George's attitude towards the kingship and the imperial rule.

There is no doubt that many a time the thought had come to him what he would do if he should become king. Ultimately in the course of events that time has come and he has come to the throne.

King Edward has a sympathy with the modern world of business, he has been called Britain's supersalesman, he has a complete knowledge of the Empire which he has visited, he has seen the tumult of the nations, for he served in the war, and has witnessed the post-war unrest. He has his own reaction to the march of progress. He has on all occasions shown that the sense of responsibility is solidly grounded in his nature. His personal graces have made him a "prince charming". This is the King to whom we guides Britain, the man to whom the people confidently entrust the sceptre.

He will have the prayers, the thoughtful advice and aid of his people and His Parliament in solving the problems which will come before an empire of so many people and he has the knowledge that his throne is founded on love and loyalty.

THE WORLD SORROWS

The death of King George has evoked the sympathy and the prayers of the entire world, for the British royal family and the nations of the Empire for King George had proved himself indeed the first man of the world. No one like him has been on the world scene in such a series of crises as have tested the sevenfold days of July and August 1914. From every country, whatever the system of government, monarchy, republic, dictatorship or tribal rule have come tributes of appreciation and tokens of sympathy and sorrow. The sympathy of the United States is particularly appreciated by the British people of the homeland and of the Dominions. The people of the Republic had honored the King and they knew what a place the King held in the hearts of his people. The kindly references sank deep into the hearts of hearers on the radio in Canada which country knows how sincere a tie binds the two North American peoples.

Yet these tributes from the United States, from North Ireland and the Irish Free State and all other lands were just what was to be expected for under all difference of forms, and in the face of all problems the heart of man appreciates a noble man and feels for a sorrowing people.

VIRGINIA AND ENGLAND

How warm a sympathy with England beats in the pulses of the people of Virginia was indicated the other day when mention was made in the Virginia Legislature of King George's illness. The Toronto Mail and Empire comments as follows on the reference.—"The Virginia legislature interrupted its proceedings long enough for the speaker to express his hope and the hope of the legislators that the life of the King might be spared. Virginia has an old connection with the British Crown which is suggested by the name of the state itself.

CITY MANAGERSHIP

For the tenth year in succession Cincinnati has closed its book swith all bills paid and a substantial sum in the bank. This is said to be due to the city manager plan. It might be worth the while of Toronto's city council to send a committee to Cincinnati to investigate.—Mail and Empire.

"ADDRESS TO A HAGGIS"

Fair fa' your honest, sonsie face,
Great chieftain o' the puddin-race!
Aboon them a' ye tak your place,
Painch, tripe, or thairm:
Weel are ye worthy of a grace
As lang's my arm.

The groaning trencher there ye fill,
Your hurdies like a distant hill,
Your pin wad help to mend a mill
In time o' need.
While thro' your pores the dews distil
Like amber bead.

His knife see rustic Labour dight,
An' cut ye up wi' ready slight,
Trenching your gushing entrails bright,
Like ony ditch;
And then, O what a glorious sight,
Warm-reekin', rich!

Then, horn for horn they stretch an' strive:
Deil tak the hindmost, on they drive,
Till a' their weel-swall'd kytes belyve
Are bent like drums;
Then auld Guidman, maist like to rive,
"Bethankit!" hums.

Is there that owre his French ragout,
Or olio that wad staw a sow,
Or fricassee wad mak her spew
Wi' perfect sconner,
Looks down wi' sneering scornfu' view
On sic a dinner?

Poor devil! see him owre his trash,
As feckless as a wither'd rash.
His spindle shank a guid whip-lash,
His nieve a nit;
Thro' blindin' flood or field to dash,
O how unfit!

But mark the Rustic, haggis-fed,
The trembling earth resounds his tread,
Clap in his calie nieve a blade,
He'll make it whissle;
An' legs an' arms, an' heads will shed
Like taps o' thrissle.

Ye pow'rs wha mak mankind your care,
And dish them out their bill o' fare,
Auld Scotland wants nae skinking ware,
That jaups in luggies;
But, if ye wish her gratfu' prayer,
Gie her a Haggis!

Great Britain has five thousand million dollars invested in India, which would be jeopardized by immediate home rule, and the trade of India means 200 million pounds a year to Great Britain Withdrawal from India by Britain would mean a rush by Japan, Germany, Italian and "the Man who walks like a Bear", to seize the kingdom, while the Hindoos and Mohammedans would slaughter each other in a fierce religious holiday free from the restraining hand of Great Britain. This was made clear by Captain Cavell, a British cavalry officer, from his experience of many years service in all parts of India. In an address before the Belleville Rotary Club Monday—just a few of the evils which would probably follow the withdrawal of British rule from India. With the British out what a mad rush of hungry nations to carve up this rich morsel of territory made so much richer by British rule and methods.

SCOTCHMEN KNOW WHAT HAGGIS IS, most other people profess ignorance of this right royal dish or seem very ill informed on the subject. So that all may know just what this truly Scotch dish is, what the materials and how it is cooked, listen to the tale of one who has made it and eaten it many a time. If any of our Scotch friends have any different way of making it let us know for we wish to know all about Haggis that there is to know, having eaten of Haggis as a loyal Son of Scotland, and asked for more. Here 'Tis:

You take the stomach of a sheep, the inner bag, you clean it well, boil it and scrub it till it is clean and white. Then you put it in a bowl, preferably a big wooden one. Take oatmeal suet ground very fine, spice it with onion broken up and then season with salt and pepper, mix some more; then put it in the sheep's bag and sew it up tight. The bag goes in a big stew pot, and steams very slowly all day. Pretty soon the bag begins to turn brown and begins to distill. Then the housewife prods the bag with a prong to let out the steam— and then you eat it with big potatoes and vegetables—Bubble Burns said "Warm-reekin' rich" Read Burns "Address to a Haggis" at the top of this column.

NEW CARBURETOR HELPS MILEAGE

Inventor Claims Car Can Travel 200 Miles on Gallon of Gas

Winnipeg, Jan. 22 (CP)—Invention of a carburetor enabling motor cars to travel more than 200 miles on an imperial gallon of gasoline is claimed by Charles Lavigne Pogue, 38-year-old Winnipeg inventor.

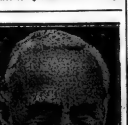
Two Winnipeg automobile company officials, T. G. Breen and W. S. Kickley, after a test run in an eight-cylinder passenger car equipped with the device, said they ran slightly more than 26 miles between the pint jar of gasoline was exhausted, and that the car functioned smoothly at all times. The run was made December 12.

After 16 years' experimentation, Mr. Pogue announced today his invention was based on a new principle, feeding gas fumes instead of raw gas into the in-take manifold, thereby increasing the power and eliminating 75 per cent of the carbon. It has been patented.

SLAIN HUEY LONG SCORES VICTORY

Forces Gain Control of Louisiana Legislature For Second Time

New Orleans, Jan. 22 (AP)—The slain Huey Long today seemed to have scored another sweeping victory as the Louisiana polls.



Early returns from yesterday's Democratic primary showed Long's candidates running as much as 75,000 votes ahead. The New Orleans count was nearly complete and while relatively few rural counties had been heard from they were not expected to reverse the trend.

Political lieutenants of the assassinated Senator hailed the results as "vindication" by Long and endorsement of his share-the-wealth plan. They also saw in the vote a rebuke to President Roosevelt and the United States' new deal.

ANNUAL REPORT OF FIRE DEPT.

His Clerk Worship J. Lapp presented to the Council on Monday evening the annual report of the fire department, which is herewith given. The council ordered the report filed.

Belleville, Ontario,
January 23rd, 1939.

To Worship Mayor Bill and Members of the City Council.
Gentlemen:—

I submit herewith a report of the activities of the Fire Department, for the year ending Dec. 31st, 1938.

The Department responded to 236 alarms during the year, classified as follows:

Dwellings 116; Trucks and cars 20; Stores 11; Hotels 2; Camps 6; Gas Pumps 1; Public buildings 7; Grass 23; Barns 9; Factories 1; Office Buildings 1; City Garage 1; Test runs 6; False alarms 6; Out of city 10; Miscellaneous 18.

In responding to calls the Department laid 19,900 ft. of 2½" hose and used 1,000 ft. of ladders and in addition used 600 ft. chemical hose. There were eight gallons of soda and acid; five gallons of Foamite and three quarts of Pyrene used during the year. Fifty-two complaints were answered by the Department.

There were 115 inspections made in the business district and 17 in residences found quite satisfactory.

23 fire extinguishers have been installed in the Schools of the City, and one new fire escape has been put on the G.W.V.A. building on Front Street. Several fire drills have been held in the Schools in which 3,284 children were taken from the buildings. These drills were very satisfactory as to the time taken to have the schools vacated and the teachers and pupils counted over the classes during these fire drills. One fire drill was held at the C.N.I. and up-to-date fire alarm systems have been installed in the Belleville Schools in which County Home for the Aged.

No accidents have happened to the members of the Department during the year and the general health of the members of the Department has been splendid.

Per purpose of comparison as to fire losses I would submit the following tables:

1938—No. of Calls 131; Value of property $1,017,140.00; Amount of loss $139,360.00.

1937—No. of calls 147; Value of Property $605,776.00; Amount of loss $31,881.85.

1931—No. of calls 164; Value of property $481,670.00; Amount of loss $18,643.26.

1933—No. of calls 125; Value of property $495,700.00; Amount of loss $40,727.00.

1923—No. of calls 182; Value of property $636,170.00; Amount of loss $23,196.75; Insurance $308,710.00.

1934—No. of calls 182; Value of property $383,475.00; Amount of loss $13,304.07; Insurance $271,980.00.

1935—No. of calls 239; Value of property $361,940.00; Amount of loss $36,183.79; Insurance $304,645.00.

The Department has answered letters calls than ever before in the history of the paid Department. The Waterworks Department has given their best attention to the matter of keeping the fire hydrants in good repair and to see that none were in a frozen condition during the winter months.

The Police Department has given full co-operation when ever required.

There are still several hydrants in some parts of the City which should be raised in order to allow free use of the wrenches on the caps.

Instead of the usual purchase of fire hose this year might I offer the suggestion that the mattresses and blankets at the fire halls be renewed.

A further supply of Foamite should be purchased.

I would be pleased to have the Insurance carried on the fire trucks looked into to see if the present covering is as satisfactory as can be obtained.

Yours respectfully,
W. J. Lynch,
Chief of Fire Department.

To you Lillian, the pathway in your early life was somewhat darkened by the loss of your mother, but we have proved your ability in carrying on the work which your mother left for you to undertake and you did it always cheerfully. The sterling worth of your father and mother during the years they have spent in the neighborhood should be a shining example for you at all times, for they were of the very best.

"It's the Tobacco that Counts!"

NO matter what form your tobacco preference takes — convenient cigarette, mellow cigar, comfortable pipe — your smoke satisfaction begins with the glossy green leaves waving gracefully across hundreds of thousands of broad acres in many lands.

This Company has to deal with an all-time purchasing problem that is, perhaps, the most difficult in industry. Our tobacco leaf is bought three years before the finished product is marketed, and then aged "in the wood" for an average of thirty months. This year's crop will not be smoked until 1939.

Tobacco is "temperamental". Crops show variations from season to season, even in the same localities. Hours of sunshine, inches of rainfall, changing soil conditions affect leaf quality.

The Company's leaf experts must know, before the buying season opens, where the best grades of different types are to be found. They must be instructed, after careful estimating, what quantities are to be purchased to meet manufacturing requirements of three years later.

Field scouts report local crop conditions. Upon these reports buyers base their plans. Their operations are world-wide. Cuba, Turkey, Virginia, Kentucky, Java, Sumatra, Ontario and Quebec all contribute their shares of different leaf types.

It's expensive, of course. Accurate advance information, the services of a corps of expert buyers, cost money. Large companies, such as ours, are compelled to keep millions of dollars tied up in tobacco in storage — all the time.

No room for guesswork here!

By solving these problems year after year we have built up a reputation for unvarying high quality for our cigarettes, cigars and tobaccos. We are jealous of our good reputation and you can rely on our unstinted efforts to guard against any deviation from this acknowledged high standard.

CONTINENTAL LIFE SHOWS PROGRESS

More Insurance in Force, Says President Hobbs at Annual Meeting

Toronto, January 22.—A substantial gain in insurance in force, premiums paid on new policies, and growth in business in force reflecting the lowest lapse ratio in history of the company, both of Hamilton, Ontario, and Toronto, were features of the annual meeting held recently at Toronto of the Continental Life Insurance Company presided over by J. W. Hobbs, President, at the annual meeting held recently at Toronto.

Insurance written and reinstated in 1935 amounted to $6,987,701 bringing the total in force to $24,897,824 at December 31, representing a gain of more than 2 per cent. over the amount in force at December 31, 1934. The increase in new paid-for business amounted to 8½ per cent.

Income for the year totalled $1,-973,275. Of this amount, $1,194,445 represents premium deposits made by more than 31,000 policyholders towards the financial security of their dependents. An additional amount of $79,175 was deposited with the Company at interest by policyholders and beneficiaries. The remainder of the income was derived from interest, rents, profit on rentals, etc.

A marked reduction in policy contracts surrendered by policyholders prior to maturity was reported, reflecting a definite trend toward increased financial stability. The total of policy contracts ceasing to be in force declined 8 1-2 per cent. as compared with 1934.

Payments to policyholders and beneficiaries including dividends, matured endowments and death claims total $940,319. Of this amount, over 75 per cent. was paid to living policyholders.

Reserves representing the liability of the Company under its policy contracts in force, calculated in accordance with the Dominion Government Standards amounted to $7,-227,830. After making allowance for these reserves and for all other liabilities, the statement shows $660,267, as additional security to policy-holders. Total assets, being the amount of resources at Dec. 31, 1935, after making provision in respect to the market value of investments, stood at $4,344,365, an increase of $306,689.

FATHER OF FLEET DIES

London, Jan. 22 (AP)—Senior Admiral of the Fleet, Sir Arthur Peuhaham, died yesterday at the age of 86. Known as "father of the British fleet" he was a keen advocate of Anglo-United States co-operation declaring in 1937, "Their combined sea power is so great they could forbid use of the sea to any European power who took up the POLICE ATTACK her neighbor."

HOPE CHEST

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. My daughter is contemplating marriage in the near future and I would like you to tell me if it is customary for a girl to have a Hope Chest, or is it optional? As I am no connoisseur, I do not approve of it, but some of my relatives think it is necessary. Please enlighten me on this subject.

2. Please let me know if it is considered proper to acknowledge gifts with a "thank you" card, or if it is better form to write a personal note? My daughter thinks it would take too much time to write personal notes.

Mother.

1. Whether or not a girl has a Hope Chest depends entirely on her own wish. There is indeed no reason why she should not have this "romantic chest", if she wishes it, to hold her linens and lingerie and other items — and she will probably find it very convenient. I can't see any legitimate reason for your disapproving of her having a Hope Chest, unless there is something you didn't tell me in your letter. I don't agree with your relatives that a Hope Chest is "necessary". It's just optional.

2. But for the question there is a most definite answer. For every gift that your daughter receives she must write a note of thanks. It is the height of good bad taste for form to use a ready-made thank-you card to thank for any kind of gift, and especially cruel to use these cards to acknowledge wedding gifts. It is most ungracious for your daughter to maintain that it takes too much time to write personal notes." How about the time and money and kind thought that is given to the gifts that she is to make her happy by their gifts? Those kind friends will need receiving a ready-made card in acknowledgment of their generosity and goodness to her. If she isn't willing to take the time to acknowledge these gifts properly and graciously, she doesn't deserve the gifts or the kindness of her friends.

M.

Bride Congratulated

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I would like to know just what should be done when one is congratulated for something accomplished or on being married? I have heard people reply in different ways, but I'd like to know the correct way.

M.

There isn't any one special phrase that we use to acknowledge felicitations or congratulations. But we should be self-conscious or inarticulate in our gracious acknowledgments. First, we should thank for the kind words of the congratulations, offering courtesies, and then add some pleasant comment to this thanks. For instance, "Thank you so much, dear friend. You make me very happy by your kind words," or "You're a dear to say such nice things, Mary—and I can't tell you how much you add to my happiness," or "It is kind of you to say such pleasant things, and I hope you will all my best for your goodness."

SHOWERS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have been planning to have a baby shower for my sister. A few friends thought it would be wrong for me to do this, as I am her sister, and that it should be left to a friend, or the invitations should be sent out in a friend's name. Is it wrong for me to have a shower for my sister?

Sister.

Your friends are right about this. In the giving of all kinds of showers it is thought bad taste, bad form for a close relative to entertain and give the shower. It is obvious why — it gives the definite impression that the shower is a promotion for gifts. And this is what it usually is. You yourself must decide whether you are willing to defy this adverse criticism. This occasion is especially important in your case, since some friends have already made their protest.

Women's Signatures

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

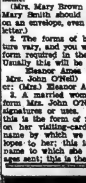
1. When writing to a friend, how should I address the envelope; Mrs. James Smith, or Mrs. Mary Brown Smith or Mrs. Mary Smith?

2. When signing my name for business reasons (for purchasing a house), what name should I use: Mrs. John M. O'Neil or Mrs. Eleanor O'Neil?

3. Please tell me when to use the "Mrs." and when the full name as Eleanor Ames O'Neil.

4. Is this signature for my letter to you correct:

Very sincerely yours,
(Mrs.) Eleanor O'Neil.
Reader.



1. First let me say that we should never use the first name of a married woman, or a widow, or a divorcee, when we address a letter to her. The envelope addressed to a married woman should be: Mrs. James Smith. The envelope addressed to a divorcee is like this: Mrs. Brown Smith. Brown being the surname of her maiden name. Or it may be addressed Mrs. M. Brown Smith, but this is not such good form as the use of the surname of the maiden name prefixed to the surname of her married name.

(Mrs. Mary Brown Smith or Mrs. Mary Smith should never be used on an envelope, even for a business letter.)

2. The forms of business signature vary, and you will be told the form required in the special case. Usually this will be safe:

Mrs. John O'Neil
or: (Mrs.) Eleanor Ames O'Neil

3. A married woman uses the form Mrs. John O'Neil for formal signatures or uses. For instance, this is the form of name she uses on her visiting-card; this is the name by which we address envelopes to her; this is the form of name by which she has her passages sent; this is the form of name

HEALTH and PSYCHOLOGY

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.

Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Nothing is more tempting than to wail for luck to carry you through life without effort. Many people try to sit back, fold your arms and adopt a do-nothing policy in expectation of what is commonly called the "lucky break". It is certainly a most unsound scheme. It leads to the hurts of battle of life. It lets you down cruelly. This form of luck can provide an ever-ready excuse for all our disappointments and failures.

Yet luck is far from being what the mind so fondly wants it to be. It may be a factor in one's career, whether in the forging of a business career, in climbing the social ladder or in the gratification of one's loves-life.

A fortuitous set of circumstances certainly has passed many an individual forward, often with a great push. Luck surely can be a great help.

Yet, after all, who can really affect in general upon how much he wants to? Man is happy when he shapes his destiny, when he controls his own fate, when he conquers by his own efforts. For there is such a thing as the urge to think well of yourself, not to be ashamed of your achievements, to feel that you have developed yourself to the fullest extent.

Call it pride if you like. It is, however, a healthy and stimulating pride. It is the propelling and often the compelling force that has made for superlative achievement.

One hears a great deal about inheritance and inspiration as reasons for landing a good job, making a lot of money, or creating something that is exceptional.

Well, suppose Dame Fortune does knock unexpectedly at the door. What chance has the lucky one of actually making good, or holding his advantage, if he or she is not made of the very stuff that succeeds without luck?

And as for inspiration, ask any creative artist—painter, writer, designer, inventor—whether he waits for inspiration to come before he sets to work. He will tell you that if he did so, he would jolly well starve. Even geniuses must muckle down to work.

And, if by chance, you happen to be one of those born to wealth and prestige, that is no reason for taking the easy course. That can, also, do great harm if misdirected.

In any case, the luck element must never be considered except as a challenge to its possessor —a challenge to make the most of a marvelous opportunity.

Wailing for luck has ruined many a man who started out with a fine mind and untold possibilities. But wailing made him grow stale. Then laziness loafed in. Later came discouragement and indifference.

Be careful lest hoping for a lucky break usurp your best years.

DR. BISCH'S DAILY DIET HINT

Chronic constipation may be best overcome through proper diet. At each meal some bulky food with plenty of roughage should be eaten. To facilitate elimination, water should be drunk between meals. Fresh fruit twice a day is invaluable, and stewed fruit before retiring is also helpful. Stubborn cases may require the use of bran or a mineral oil for a short time, taking on arising.

Produce Prices on Montreal Market

Montreal, Jan. 22.—Trading was very quiet on the local produce market yesterday. Closing of the Canadian Commodity Exchange and the conventions being held by the Canadian Produce Association combined to reduce volume to the minimum. Receipts were posted at the Board of Trade for the day as 915 cases of eggs, 400 boxes of butter and 5 boxes of cheese. Prices were steady.

The butter market has put a mark of 34¾c to 35¼c per pound for No. 1 in cartons or Ld. lots.

On the egg market graded shipments arriving in cartons or Ld. lots were generally 29c to 30c, extra 26c for A-medium, and 24c for A-pullets.

WALL STREET CLOSE

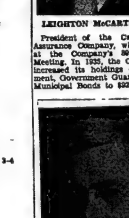
New York, Jan. 22 (AP)— Gains of fractions to two points or more were well distributed today through the stock exchange list.

The fall of the Lenzi cabinet had little effect, apparently, on the upward movement of equities. The activity slowed up after noon, but prices generally held around their long for the session.

Principal share advances were recorded by Johns-Manville, Westinghouse, Dupont, Deere, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, Omnibus, Union Carbide, Sperry, Sterling, U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, U.S. Pipe, General Motors, Chrysler, Douglas and Boeing. The oils and utilities were moderately improved.

The late tone was firm. Transfers approximated 2,950,000 shares.

TORONTO MINES



Toronto, Jan. 22—Senior gold and the leading base metal issues displayed strength in the early and mid-day trading on the mining section of Toronto exchange today. Dome had a gain of nearly a point to 47½, McIntyre ¾ to 46¾ and Hollinger ¼ to 15¾, in the secondary group higher prices ruled for Pickle Crows, Macassa, Lake and Read-Authier.

Noranda was the strongest of the coppers, adding a full point. Ventures, Waite Amulet and Big Missouri were higher. Higher base metal prices for the metals helped the group. Copper added 8 shillings per long ton to the London price.

LEIGHTON McCARTHY, K.C.

President of the Canada Life Assurance Company, who presided at the Company's 89th Annual Meeting in 1935. The Canada Life increased its holdings of Government, Government Guaranteed and Municipal Bonds to $20,136,386.

A. N. MITCHELL

Vice-President and General Manager of the Canada Life Assurance Company, who reported in his annual address that the Company paid to policyholders, annuitants and beneficiaries the large sum of $36,000,000, of which $19,000,000 was paid to living policyholders.

A substantial London advance for bar silver had practically no effect on the silver quotation here. Eldorado added a cent or two easily.

TORONTO INDUSTRIALS

Toronto, Jan. 22 (CP)—Brazilian, International Nickel, Walkers Common and Ford A were the outstanding leaders on the industrial section of Toronto Stock Exchange today. All traded in substantial volume at gains ranging up to a point or more. Nickel had the widest gain, selling up to 47¾. The general tone was firm.

New York's tendency to more ahead stimulated buying in the Toronto list with the oils also receiving attention. Imperial and International Petroleum were up, the latter adding nearly a point. Shawinigan and Montreal Power were the best of the utilities group in the early trading while the foods and construction issues were unchanged to slightly lower.

Company Enters 89th Year of Service to Policyholders

Another substantial increase in assets featured the Annual Report of the Canada Life Assurance Company, presented in Toronto on January 16th, the gain being $6,530,539, bringing the assets to a total of over $248,000,000.

The total income from all sources during 1935 was over $41,000,000. The sum of over $26,000,000 was paid to policyholders, annuitants and beneficiaries. Living policyholders received $19,000,000, apart from loans made to them.

During the past six years, the Canada Life has paid to policyholders, annuitants and beneficiaries over $155 million dollars. During the same period, the Company's assets increased by $75,125,635.

in line with its established policy, the Canada Life has increased only interest actually collected in 1935 in arriving at its earned interest rate of 4.35%.

The year-end results show increases in new annual premium ordinary insurance in Canada, United States and British Isles, the total increase being two and one-quarter millions. The first year premiums received from this source exceeded the record of 1934 by $145,000. It is a significant fact also that, in Canada, the number of insurance units made exceeded those of the previous year by approximately twenty per cent.

Among all legal reserve life insurance companies in North America, having one hundred million dollars or more of insurance in force, reporting to an independent statistical organization, the Canada Life showed the lowest lapse rate during 1934, and the rate was even better in 1935. The Company's lapses last year were the lowest of any year since 1928, the improvement over 1934 being 20%.

Mr. A. N. Mitchell, Vice-President and General Manager, in his address said in part:

"The safeguarding steps which the Canada Life inaugurated early in the period of storm have been very effective. The result is a report which should give interest satisfaction to policyholders.

"During the last six years it has been the policy of the Company to not only strengthen the reserves which are made apparent in any annual report, but also, through writing down of book values, to otherwise heavily strengthen its position. With the development, however, of more prosperous times, we are confident that much of what has been done in this way will later be released for the benefit of the policyholders' surplus accounts. In the meantime, we believe that these adjustments have made the position of the Company one which should give its policyholders a very comforting feeling of safety."

Optimistic on Outlook For Copper

Brandeis, Goldschmidt & Co., Ltd. London Metal Brokers, have the following to say in their last Weekly Market Report on Copper:—

"The price of Copper since our last report has shown a slight gain, which can be attributed to consumer buying in this country and to the subsidy paid to the Chilean Government. The general tone is very well maintained."

Paymaster

According to a report from Toronto, Paymaster mark on the No. 3 high grade vein at Paymaster continues to produce high values. Ore found taken from the 1210 level west gave $26.70 per ton across 36 inches another round gave $77 across 43 inches while on the same drift on the north vein ran $31 across 28 inches.

The 1450 and 1575 levels are expected to be in ore in the very near future.

The stock has been a favorite of the market for several weeks and the upward trend appears to be the all time high in recent days. The stock enjoys very agressive support.

The New York market still is a day-to-day affair to most operators. The public is somewhat more interested in stocks but cash buyers predominates and prices are quickly scaled. Investment trusts are quite heavily committed to the bull side, remembering the sad experience of last June when the market forged ahead into new high ground after a period of hesitancy comparable to the present. The managers of these funds are none too optimistic over the outlook for stocks; but the inevitability of further inflation practically "rules" hands.

CURRENT SPORT
DAY BY DAY

Out of respect to the late King George the Fifth, all matches scheduled in the Belleville Badminton Club for this week have been postponed until a date later in the club's activities. Yesterday morning Manager Eddie Thomas of the local O.H.A. entries received a telegram from Bill Hewitz to the effect that all games in the provincial association would be cancelled on Tuesday night in respect to the late Sovereign of the Empire. His Majesty having been a keen sportsman and a great lover of hockey brought home to all true sportsmen the heartfelt mourning of the sporting fraternity of the Empire. All football games scheduled in the British Isles for this coming week have been indefinitely postponed in respect to the late monarch, who was the titular lover of Rugbyand national games.

Feelings are commencing to travel in a rather high altitude and competition is keenest for the local Senior Intercollegiate Hockey group of entries every Wednesday night at the Belleville Arena. The "Nick-o-leep" as it has been called by some due to the fact that low games can be witnessed each Wednesday night in the week for the small sum of a dime (a nickel a game), was the first to start off with a twin bill that proved most entertaining and saw plenty of good fast hockey dished up to the fans. Last week approximately 600 residents and adult patrons stamped their approval of the twin bill and incidentally this number will be considerably augmented when Belleville fans tonight when the O.S.D. seniors clash with the Albert College Senior Club Arts team in the feature game with the R.C.I. and Y.S. senior puckchasers meeting in the Queen's Athletic's "Irish" class. Yesterday we suggested a mix-name be given to Coach Shibicki of the R.C.I. senior scholastic puckstars, but to date only one suggestion for the name efficiently interested to submit a member, the old "Tri-colors" was his choice for the name of the R.C.I. senior team in your selection before the week is out. We are advanced, we'll gladly publish all suggestions and consequently use the most popular.

When the Gananoque juniors appear on the Belleville Arena ice on visitors appeared on the ice in distinctive uniforms that resembled Joseph's coat of many colors. Their lack of adequate dress or a uniform nature did not seem to interfere with their ability to play hockey, but the lack of numerals on the backs of the players' sweaters made it hard for the official in charge and the spectators to distinguish just which player was whom and when. All patrons of O. H. A. games in Belleville Arena suggest regrets with the management, that they carry the lines and supply proposed numbers of each team in the middle page. Naturally the cash customers deserve some consideration and for the small cost of providing numbers for the players, the team should place a squad in competition without having their players presented identities. Likewise the O.H.A. rules call for the players to be numbered and there is surely really no excuse for appearing on the ice as did the Gananoque squad.

A local hockey fan stepped us on the street today and wanted to know just how the O. H. A. schedules stood as published in the programme issued by the Belleville Hockey Club at the Arena. For the information of those interested we might state, that the local junior O.H.A. schedule is listed as published, except for the games slated to be R.M.C. that club having dropped from group competitions. As for the intermediate schedule the only games left on the programme published are the Oshawa and Belleville and return dates. Previously it was announced that Belleville would spend a week-end series with both Oshawa and Peterboro but a slight change has been made in the latter series. The "week-end" will play a double schedule with the Oshawa squad, as the latter did not desire two games in Belleville. The Peter and the Cheese will play the final number of games at home versus each other, and as a result will be unable to make their second appearance in the Little Inch City next Monday night, as the schedule for the latter part of the month has been moved as yet. The Oshawa Chevies are slated to make their only appearance of the season at the Belleville Arena versus the "Redmen" on Friday night of this week.

Basketball fans are in for a treat on Thursday night when the local "Y" intermediate hoopsters take on the stanley R.A.C. squad in a scheduled E.O.B.A. game at the Collegiate gym. A win for the locals will shroud them into second position in the group standing.

President Alvin Bradley of the Cleveland Baseball Club in the American League, yesterday refused a request for $241,000.00 from the New York Yankees for Outfielder Earl Averil and Joe Vosmik, the latter being a Cleveland boy, who made good in his own home town. Apparently Col. Ruppert and his henchmen are becoming slightly selfish, especially after Owner Tom Yawkey of the Red Sox, recently released the band from the bank roll and purchased so many of Connie Mack's star players. Then Mickey Cochrane's purchasing of Jimmy Foxx did not rub Ruppert's Milks any to well either. It looks like a grab season in the big leagues in 1936.

Bert Hedges of Toronto has been named for the referee for tonight's Peterboro at Oshawa, O.H.A. tilt.

Stirling and District

...ers of the Stirling Agricultural Society gathered in the Agricultural rooms on Monday afternoon for their annual meeting. The Vice-President of the organization, Mr. William Pitchett, presided over the meeting in the absence of Mr. Ed Fyear, president, who was detained. Among the members of the executive present were Mr. A. E. O'Donnell, Secretary; Mr. Gilbert Thompson, Treasurer, and Messrs. C. U. Heath, E. Cantlin, J. E. Thompson, Clinton McCoy, A. Bleecker, Fred Mallory, H. R. Tompkins, M. Sine, and Joseph Wilson, district representative from the Ontario Dept. of Agriculture. Mr. J. E. O'Donnell, secretary, presented a detailed report of the society's activities which took place at the Board of Directors' meeting, the last annual meeting and the meeting of the directors which followed.

The financial report was also read by Secretary O'Donnell and revealed at a vast increase in every branch of the work in connection with the Fair of 1935 as compared with former years. The expenses were slightly higher, there was a marked increase in the number of entries which included the horses, and the receipts were also far in excess of former years. On motion of Mr. C. Health and Ben Bleecker the first three of these reports were adopted and the adoption of the financial report was moved by E. Thompson and seconded by E. Cantlin. Mr. Joseph Wilson speaking on behalf of the district, paid the highly helpful suggestions to simplify the work of the treasurer for the coming year. Secretary O'Donnell replied before the gathering corresponded received from the secretary of the Ontario Fairs' Association, and also read a long list of the members within the Stirling Society.

The Ladies' branch or the work was then discussed, and it was decided on a motion made by H. R. Tompkins and seconded by Ben Bleecker that young ladies under the age of 18 would be allowed to exhibit in restricted classes without entry fee.

Mr. J. E. Thompson in giving a report on the horse division of the fair of which he was superintendent, advocated more adequate accommodation for entries in that division. It was unfair to the exhibitors and dangerous to the horses, he declared, as it was now. Mr. Pitchett, superintendent of the poultry division, reported everything in good order but felt that the addition of wood to the fence necessary in the near future. Mr. Wilson said that in considering improvement, it would be well to think about a show ring for the cattle also. It was moved by C. U. Heath and seconded by J. C. McCoy, that the Stirling Agricultural Society join the Stirling Association at the Ontario Fair Association Convention which is to be held at the Royal Edward Hotel, Toronto, on February, 3rd, 4th and 5th, inclusive. J. E. Thompson, Ben Bleecker, J. E. O'Donnell were appointed delegates to attend a meeting of the Central Fair Association which meets in Belleville City Hall on February 20th. Mr. Thomas W. Solmes then directed the election of officers for the year 1936, with the following group of gentlemen being elected:

Messrs. W. Pitchett, Mac. Johnson, Kenneth Mumby, Ralph Campbell and Lorne Hagerman were appointed auditors for the year's work in connection with the senior group of directors.

The members and adherents of St. Paul's United Church took part in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at the service on Sunday morning when the following new members were received into membership of the church. Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Wells; Mr. Don Williams by letter from the United Church at Hamilton, and Mr. and Mrs. Chester Hoard, by letter from Fairmont United Church. Unusual interest was also taken in the evening service when the special music was provided by the Sunday School choir in a service of appropriateness to the approaching season of the congregation.

The public choir under the leadership of Mr. J. L. Clute offering a special anthem. A duet by Misses Ilinda Clark and Stella McKee was also greatly appreciated. Mr. Fred Hahn, superintendent assisted in the pulpit and conducted the hymns and the service in prayer. Rev. W. W. Rowland gave the address of the evening, after which he delivered, in two stories, one to the small girls and one to the boys. He then delivered a very appropriate message to the older members of the audience basing his thought on the thought "Stirling's Greatest Asset". When the church was proudly exhibited visiting friends our Community Hall, Memorial Park, Water system, Lighting System, Library and Churches our friends must of course be greatly impressed. But we give the Community's greatest asset we have turned from children into men and women, is the Community's old and young.

Officers To Swear New Oath Allegiance

Ottawa, Jan. 21 (CP)—Officers of Canadian military units will be required to swear a new oath of allegiance with the accession of King Edward VIII, it was stated today at the Department of National Defence. Those holding non-commissioned ranks will not be required to do so.

The department, it was stated, was preparing orders covering the matter which would be issued when ready. Officers, it was explained, held commissions from the King and must therefore swear allegiance to King Edward VIII as they did to George V.

Have YOU taken advantage of the NEW RATES on Long Distance TELEPHONE CALLS?

Already it is apparent that telephone users appreciate the advantages of recent changes in Long Distance rates. Will YOU bear them in mind:

NIGHT RATES on "Person-to-Person" Calls

Calls to a particular person are now available (on all but short-haul messages) at reduced rates after 7 p.m. Hitherto, discounts have been made at night only on "Anyone" (station-to-station) calls. The discounts on most "Person-to-Person" night calls are the same in money as on "Anyone" calls.

WEEK-END RATES

Night rates will apply all day Sunday on both "Person-to-Person" and "Anyone" calls. This means that the lowest rates for either "Anyone" or "Person-to-Person" calls are available continuously from 7 p.m. Saturday to 4.30 a.m. Monday.

NIGHT RATES on "Anyone" Calls

To points where the Day "Anyone" rate is 50 cents or less, the discounts for Night calls are reduced or discontinued. That is, some of the present 25- and 30-cent Night rates are increased by 5 or 10 cents. These discount inducements to call while the tide of traffic is lower are replaced by the more attractive Night "Person-to-Person" and Week-end reductions.

Note some examples of these Rate changes:

"PERSON-TO-PERSON" CALLS			"ANYONE" CALLS
Former Rate Any Time	New Rate Night and Week-end	BELLEVILLE to:	New Rate Night and Week-end	Former Night Rate
$ .65	$ .55	PETERBORO	$ .45	$ .50
1.00	.70	TORONTO	.70	.40

1.45	.70	NORTH BAY	1.15	.60
4.75	3.00	WINNIPEG	3.75	2.00

*An example of Night Rate increases which occur in a few cases.

This is the fifth important revision of Long Distance telephone rates within the past seven years. In both social and business affairs the new Week-end and Night rates offer you a broader service at a lower cost.

British Rule in India Only Safeguard Against Fearful Human Carnage

Capt Cavell. of Indian Cavalry States at Rotary Luncheon

2 ARMIES IN INDIA

Speaker Describes The Many Castes And Religions

"India is in bondage to the British," according to a certain class of politicians in India, and ill-informed local speakers or other nations, but an address before Belleville Rotary Club Monday by Captain H. C. Cavell, with many years experience in the Imperial cavalry service in India, showed that British rule in India is the only safeguard against internal strife and fearful human carnage, against famine and disease, and that India is in bondage rather to superstitions and her many religions and to the persecutions of her poor through Brahmin priests and money lenders. She is in bondage to her incessant internal strife and the British Empire has an obligation to her, which will not be liquidated until that internal strife is ended and India can take her place among the nations of the world secure in the fact that she has internal harmony and can therefore protect herself against aggression.

Captain Cavell was introduced to the Rotary Club by J. A. McFee and appreciation of his very fine and informative address was voiced by J. O. Reddy and Lieut. Brett Boyce.

LAVAL THREAT—Setting the stage for the fall of Premier Pierre Laval's "save-the-franc" cabinet in France, Edouard Herriot, above, was selected to head the powerful Radical-Socialist party. At the same time, it was suspected that six Radical-Socialist ministers in addition to Herriot, would, at the time leader of the group, would resign. Laval who then would submit the resignation of his entire coalition cabinet to President Albert Lebrun. Fears of a financial crisis were expressed by Laval and his friends.

Home Rule for India?

"There are two armies in India," said the speaker, "the British army, Imperial, supported by the British Government, and the Indian army, composed of natives of India and officered by Imperials. When the war broke out in 1914 the Imperials were withdrawn from India for service at the various fronts. This left India in a precarious condition in which a rebellion could very easily be fomented. It became necessary to cope with this situation, and accordingly promises were made which included a measure of Home Rule. This constitutes the problem facing the British Empire in India. A problem created by the British which only British can solve. In 1917 Mr. E. S. Montagu, then Secretary of State for India, made the following declaration in the British House of Commons:

"The policy of His Majesty's government is that of the increasing association of Indians in every branch of the administration and the gradual development of self-governing institutions with a view to the progressive realization of responsible government in India as an integral part of the British Empire. Progress in this policy can only be achieved by successive stages."

Two years later that declaration was incorporated in the Government of India Act of 1919 and passed into law.

Captain Cavell told his listeners what would happen if British granted home rule bobs bobs and withdrew from India. There would be civil services and bloody wars between the various religious sects which in turn, either with an intensity almost unbelievable, and are only kept in control now by British law and British troops. The doors would be open for a return of the famines which formerly blew with regions, and neglected sanitation would bring the pestilence, which formerly killed thousands. Also would be Britain to withdraw from India Japan would move right in and take charge. Germany also might seize India, or even Mussolini.

A Tragic Mistake

Home Rule for India at this time would be a tragic mistake, said the speaker, who gave a very interesting description of conditions in India showing that with a country so divided against itself, complete Home Rule would only mean civil war between the various religious sects in which the best-up religious hatred of years, restrained by British law and order, would be unleashed in fearful slaughter.

Self-Government, Self-Support, Self-Defence

Self-Support, Self-Defence are the three basic principles governing the Administration of the British Empire, nations within the Empire, but India is not a nation in the sense that European states are of one race and nation. India is a long continent inhabited by many different races who make up three-quarters of the British Empire. The great problem is shall India be given Home Rule at once or shall it be developed gradually over a period of years? Naturally enough old Capt. Cavell, Indian politicians want Home Rule at once, and unfortunately they have converted many of our British politicians to their view. Captain Cavell's view is that of other officers and officials who have spent large parts of their lives in the country is quite different. They feel that even one hundred years from now India will not be ready for Home Rule.

India's Many Religions

There are 350 million people in India, one-sixth of the world's population, and these people speak 20 distinct languages. India comprises nearly 1,900,000 square miles, as against Canada's 3,700,000 square miles, but while Canada has a population of ten millions, India has 350 million not banded together by any unity of race, creed or country. India has: Hindoos 238,000,000; Mohammedans 78,000,000; Buddhists 11,500,000; Sikhs 3,500,000; Jains 1,500,000; Christians 4,500,000; Parsees 100,000; Animists 7,000,000; Miscellaneous 10,000,000 or more.

That gives a picture of the problem in India—so many religions, all festering with hate for the others, except the Christians, of course, and in the opinion of the speaker the only real Christians among the natives were those who were born Christians. The average native accepts Christianity just to propitiate a new god which he had neglected before. When all the gods are propitiated in his favor he feels that language, and barbaric and insanitary customs, were given by Captain Cavell as one of the most disturbing impositions of life in India ever heard here, a complete answer to the advocates of immediate home rule for India.

"Stars Over Broadway"

"Scrooge" and New and Exciting Screen Musical Coming Tomorrow

Reported as introducing a new idea in screen musicals when it was as two new film stars, Warner Brothers' latest musical, "Stars Over Broadway" is scheduled as the feature attraction at the Belle Theatre today and tomorrow, matinee daily. Besides being the film debut of the popular radio stars, James Melton and Jane Froman, the picture has an all star cast which includes Pat O'Brien, Frederick McNeill, Ruth Donnelly and Frank Fay.

There is a short unusual mixture of musical numbers, which vary from classical selections taken from the immortal works of Verdi, Schubert and Von Flotow, to new compositions of Harry Warren and Al Dubin, famous song writers.

The songs are mostly sung by James Melton, radio star, except although Miss Muir does sing one, the first time she has ever sung for the screen.

There is a spectacular specialty number in the picture staged and directed by Bobby Connolly, the famous musical comedy producer called "At Your Service, Madame," Yeah Muir and James Melton sing the lyrics.

Pat O'Brien has the role of a theatrical agent who is about to say goodbye to the world because he is unable to find any clients, when he hears a porter in his hotel singing. Recognizing an unusually good voice, he puts the youth under contract.

James Melton, the radio star who makes his bow to the screen in this picture is the porter.

Miss Froman, also a radio star making her debut in pictures, plays opposite Melton.

The ingenue role is played by Miss Muir, who plays the part of an ambitious amateur, who has a golden voice, but who is discouraged from going on the radio by O'Brien, who is in love with her.

Frank McHugh furnishes much of the comedy as an unemployed and down-and-out song plugging friend of Pat O'Brien.

Charles Dickens' "Scrooge"

The genius that belonged to Charles Dickens is transferred to the screen in the tenderly dramatic version, "Scrooge" which is taken from the English novelist's famous "A Christmas Carol", announced as the second feature attraction on the same program.

Lovers of Dickens may protest that the motion-picture cannot possibly catch the spirit of the immortal author in the short time they need only sit through the film to find the true mirror.

Seymour Hicks, who plays "Scrooge" seems to have been created for the part. One can, at least, almost feel that Dickens wrote the character with Seymour Hicks in his mind The same is true of Bob Cratchit, the unfortunate and faithful clerk in Scrooge's office, a role played by Donald Calthrop to perfection.

The entire cast, in fact is as Dickensian as one could wish. Added to this the fact that the producers have spared no pains in creating the proper atmosphere for the story and that the dialogue is word for word as it was written by Dickens more than ninety years ago, and you have a picture that provides entertainment for old folks and young alike.

"Mutiny on the Bounty"

Proclaimed the screen's most glorious adventure romance, "Mutiny on the Bounty" comes to a highly successful four days' engagement at the Belle Theatre today.

Frank Lloyd, who filmed "Cavalcade" and the memorable "Sea Hawk" was the director.

Three of the greatest actors, either on stage or screen head the cast of more than fifty featured players. They are Charles Laughton, as Captain Bligh; Clark Gable as Fletcher Christian, leader of the mutineers and, Franchot Tone, as Midshipman Byam.

"Mutiny on the Bounty" is truly the world's greatest motion picture and should not be missed when it is presented tonight for the last times at 7.05 and 9.30 p.m.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Shipmates Forever"

Ruby Keeler Now Giving Lessons in Navy History

"Ruby Keeler—Instructress in American Naval History".

The lovely little dancing star of the movies is qualified to have those words on her cards, since she returned from Annapolis, where a majority of the scene for the Cosmopolitan production, "Shipmates Forever" which comes to the Capitol Theatre tomorrow were made. Ruby co-stars with Dick Powell in this musical drama which is a Warner Bros. release.

At a gathering of friends at her home the night evening, she tested out their knowledge—and incidentally displayed her own—concerning the memories among America's fighting heroes of the sea.

"Who said 'Don't give up the ship!'" she inquired.

"Well, let's see," hesitated a friend of Ruby's husband, Al Jolson. Wasn't that what John Paul Jones said?"

"Wrong," declared Miss Keeler, "I don't give up the ship' which is the motto of the Navy, were the words of Captain James Lawrence of the Chesapeake, when the British frigate Shannon was about to board her. Then on June 1, 1813, off the New England coast, he was mortally wounded in the battle.

"What John Paul Jones said was 'I have not yet begun to fight,' when the commander of the British fleet asked him to surrender. Jones' ship was the Bon Homme Richard. The two ships fought, lashed together, off the Scotland coast, September 23, 1779. Jones won the fight, and, though his own vessel sank, he took possession of the enemy ship.

"How do you know all this Ruby?" one of her friends asked.

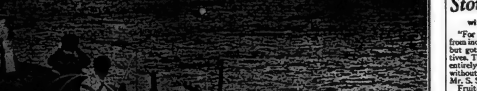
"In between scenes, at Annapolis, I studied," she said. "The Navit is now one of the most inspiring places I have ever been in. I only wish we who said 'We have met the enemy and they are ours'

Nobody knew, off hand, so she told them.

That was Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, who defeated the British fleet on Lake Erie on September 10, 1813.

Another query that the young had to "give up" was, who uttered the words "Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead!" Then, Miss Keeler informed her little hearers, was Captain David Glasgow Farragut, when he rushed his squadron into Mobile Bay on August 5, 1864, and destroyed all the Confederate vessels.

"What did Admiral Dewey say on May 1, 1898 at Manilla Bay?" Ruby asked —and for the first time got answers from a few of the party. This event being within the lifetime of some, they recalled that Dewey told his captain on the Olympia, "You may fire when ready, Gridley," and Gridley began the cunning that destroyed the whole Spanish fleet without a single American life being lost.



Some of the guests also remembered that it was Captain John Philip, who, at the Battle of Santiago, said: "Don't cheer boys, the poor devils are dying."

Miss Keeler, Dick Powell, Director Frank Borzage and all the rest of the company in "Shipmates Forever," expect a revival of interest in naval heroes, following the showing of the picture.

"Don't Give up the Ship" is the title of a stirring march song by Harry Warren and Al Dubin that runs through the play, and which has already made a tremendous hit among the Annapolis midshipmen.

Others in the cast include Lewis Stone, Ross Alexander, Eddie Acuff, Richard (Dick) Foran, Bobby Light and John Eldredge.

Dale Plays The Game

—BY—

Ann Forester

At Sandy's response a swarm of warm and hungry passengers thronged to the stand. It was like the descent of the locusts. Before that hungry horde, ham and eggs and coffee disappeared as did the cross before the wreathes of insects. Sandy became a human dynamo, tossing waffles, cracking eggs, drawing coffee. Then, in the midst of his distraction he became aware of system evolving itself out of disorder. The yellow-haired girl he had been feeding had come around over the counter and was standing at his elbow, making sandwiches, pouring out coffee, passing dishes—even making change from the cash register.

"Swell work, rella!" shouted the driver as he rose and began to pick his teeth. "I'll make the my noon stop goin' through this town. We're right on schedule. Come on, rella!"

He blew the horn and the locusts vanished in a cloud of dust, leaving the Waffle Kid staring at the exhausted girl over the ruins of paper plates and dirty cups.

"Sister," said the Waffle Kid solemnly, "you certainly belong in-ole-co-lie-epol! I couldn't never have fed them hungry hounds if you hadn't've been standin' along. Say—you don't look like the rest of the birds down here. How come you blow in?"

Briefly Dale told him of her departure from the show. Her fruitless search for work.

Sandy listened, every freckle twinkling sympathy. When she had finished he spoke earnestly.

"Sister," said Sandy impressively, "you got a job! N' Red Miller stops the stage here every day like he said, I gotta have help. An' you're it!"

How Phil would jeer at her! thought Dale bitterly. Dale Evans—a waitress in a highway lunch stand! But it meant food and money. It meant that she could get together enough money to take her back to the city. The bargain was struck and solemnly sealed over a ham sandwich and a cup of coffee. While he ate, Sandy gravely explained his own particular brand of philosophy.

"Maybe this dump ain't much to look at——" he said, glancing lovingly at the pine counter and the cash register, "But after all it's a pretty good ol' hole. An' it won't flood! Like a oil well——" to Dale's inquiring look: "Oil wells is a man's ruination, Sister! Look at me. I'm a man what's suffered. I come down from the city thinkin' I was going to strike it rich. Sunk every blamed cent I had in a wild cat well. An' what happened?—it flooded up on me! Oil knocked me down an' waffles is pickin' up. Lucky for me I worked in a fly restaurant once an' learned how to cook. I thought it was hard times then, but most times what you think is hard lines Sister, is what turns out to be your fortune in the long run."

He looked across at the girl, who was hunched on the stool, her chin sunk in her hand, moody brown eyes fastened on the glaring highway.

"It's hard to see where there's any fortune in this for me!" she said bitterly.

The Waffle Kid sent a shrewd glance at her yellow head.

"You don't know nothin' about it, Sister!" he said severely. "I sat in too many games when luck was against me an' just kep' drawin' the cards. Luck's bound to change if you just keep playin' the game."

Playing the game! All very well, thought Dale resentfully, when the game was love and life and the scheming of rearing city scrubs, that played here in the stale atmosphere of the blazing desert town, with a shabby room in a dubious hotel awaiting her at night..... What a fool—and a hysterical, blind fool she had been to stay here in this miserable town where no one wanted her!

All the next week she feverishly worked over the Waffle Kid's lunch stand and helped him feed the horses. Sandy slept in the rough room behind the lunch room. Coming to work one morning, Dale had met a bear—a warning growl as she went near the open door. Startled, she looked down and saw a dog—a beautiful white and tawny collie, crouching beside the bed. On the floor, sprawled a man's shabby figure, fast asleep.

Sandy, measuring coffee into the percolator in the front of the store, briefly explained.

"That's Brant Kendall. Beautiful-ly plastered he is, too!" Then, in answer to her blank look. "Ain't you heard of Brant Kendall? He's Cole City's official Bad Boy. Comes from a rich family back east, Brant does. He's some kind of a row with them. —I dunno nothin' about the scraps he's got in, but I guess it was good! Swifted in here with big schemes about staking a wild cat. It went broke an' so did he. An' about his lungs. Poor ol' Brant—I guess it won't be hotshottin' none of it much longer."

"You mean——" The girl's eyes were big with horror.

Sandy nodded sadly. "Yep. It won't be long now! That's why I say that folks that are down on him for humming around the way he does goin' to be sorry pretty soon. Ain't it that—you know I like the guy! Smart fella, Brant is. If he'd only leave the booze alone an'—There was a ring of scheming intention under the regret of Sandy's voice. Like many another illiterate man, he had a lively respect for an education. Some quality between the well-bred, dissolute Brant fascinated him.

Dale herself felt the fascination of that long, lean figure lying insensible on Sandy's cot. It drew her like a magnet to look at him when she had hung up her hat.

Something pitiful about the man. It was like looking at some splendid ruin. He was tall, appearing even taller by reason of the thinness of his big frame. Not so handsome as Phil, thought the girl decided, but his strongly marked features were soonthow remarkable. His mouth was firm and well cut, but wilful. Even in sleep there was a bitter line to it. A brown man.....light brown hair sunburned nearly wheat-yellow on the top..... A tawny brown overlaying the pallor of illness on his face. His skin was naturally dark, Dale guessed with a guessed how she knew that the closed eyes would be steel-gray.

"A strange, compelling man..... A haunting man. Dale wasn't sure she liked him.....

He thoughts touched him now and then through the long, warm morning. Brant Kendall—outcast from his family. A man of breeding—of education. A derelict now, deserted except for the dusty collie and the careless kindness of a sandwich peddler.

The rush of noon time emptied her mind of everything save thoughts of eggs and coffee. Dale worked like mad beside the frantic Sandy, darting about with food, making change, taking orders. The small place grew oppressive with the heat and the crowding of many people. The powder dissolved on Dale's hot face, her hair was plastered to her wet forehead. In the midst of the turmoil she had the conviction that someone was watching her. She turned and felt her eyes plunge into the gaze of a man across the room. The outcast of Colt City had come to life. He was standing in the doorway of the back room, watching her with eyes from a startling steel-gray in his dark face.

For a moment a flash of unkind understanding passed between the man and the girl. They sensed her armor of pitiful assurance. They made Dale feel that her georgette dress was flimsy and sadly in need of cleaning. That there was a runner in her chiffon stockings. That the heel of one showy white kid pump was run over. As clearly as though he had spoken she knew that in Brant Kendall's eyes she was only a cheap little actress who had descended to working in a hash-house. And this from the man whom all Colt City scorned! Dale could have wept with rage.

CHAPTER II

BRANT KENDALL

When Dale went to work the next day, instead of Sandy's familiar figure behind the counter, Dale saw the man called Brant Kendall slouched against the counter. The worn and hopeless look he had worn in his sleep was less apparent now. There was about him an almost aggressive masculinity. The glance of his steel-gray eyes was a challenge. His voice, though neatly clipped in a manner very different from Colt City's slow drawl, was mocking and somehow irritating. The girl gave him the tall end of a nod and tried to ignore him as she wrung out a damp cloth and carefully wiped off the lunch counter.

"Sandy's gone up town to buy something or other. He left me here to help you tend shop," Brant Kendall explained.

The very implication of partnership annoyed Dale. She felt her heart swelling with wrath toward the absent Sandy. Why had he told this irritating man to stay around here to bother her? she thought hotly. Watching her with that faintly mocking look in his eyes..... Speaking with that mocking courtesy..... To his low irritation—for she felt intuitively it would cause him much amusement—she stopped to pat the collie who had come into the store with his master and was sprawled out on the floor at the end of the counter. The dog permitted her to pat his tawny head, but his manner was that of condescension—quite the same, Dale thought, as though he had attempted to pat his master.

Blushed beak with one elbow on the counter, Brant Kendall watched through the cloud of his cigarette smoke.

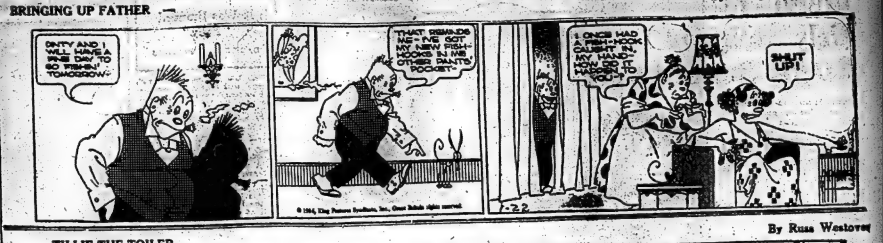
Sandy tells me you were on the Fascination held his eyes fixed upon the two. How real they were! He heard the girl speak to the lion, real. She touched him, and then he knew that she was and then he saw her brush past the great savage not afraid. "Who are you?" he asked in limping English and then he saw her brush past the great savage that was made beautiful by a strange accent. "What has happened to you?" "I have been lost," he said. "I have not eaten for a long while." And then he fainted.

The sight of the lion growling above him might have shaken the nerve of a man in better physical condition than was Wayne Colt, but the vision of a beautiful girl running quickly toward the savage beast was the final stroke that almost overwhelmed him. He thought rapidly. In a brief instant he recalled that men had borne witness to the fact that they felt no pain while being mauled by a lion, but if he were dying, then surely he was made, for the lion and the girl must be a hallucination.



stage," he began with easy friendliness.

"Yes," the girl answered shortly. "And that you left it—deserted your public, so to speak—for the benefit of Colt City. Ah, well, odd tasks....But perhaps there is a larger reason. Perhaps what the sob writers call 'a pretty woman' hovering in the background? Some lucky gallant of Colt City, who is tempted you from the boards? Some sun-browned son of the desert—"

A flash of angry brown eyes answered him. "You're mistaken," the girl answered clearly. "If there is one thing I like less than women of it's men!"

CONFEDERATION ASSETS INCREASE

Annual Meeting to Addressed by Life Association Officers

Growth in strength and resources is shown in the 66th annual report of the Confederation Life Association, the total assets of which at the close of 1935, reached the sum of $106,771,986, an increase for the year of $7,346,812. The figures have been carried into the balance sheet on their book values, which are less by $1,000,000 than their values as determined by the Insurance Department of the Dominion of Canada.

The Association's reserves for assurance and annuity contracts now amount to $91,886,022, an increase of $6,773,804 over the year 1934.

Total net income for 1935 amounted to $9,889,864. As consideration for annuities, $1,304,708 was received during the year. Net premium income, excluding annuities, amounted to $8,894,716.

Surplus earned in 1935 amounted to $3,827,460—"a very excellent result," the directors declared in their report, "in view of the rates of interest at which investments can be made." The total surplus, as at December 31st, 1935, amounted to $7,926,096, of which $3,986,640 an increase of $401,382 over the same item for 1934, is held free and unallotted to policyholders, and available to meet any future contingency.

Payments to policyholders and beneficiaries during the year amounted to the large sum of $12,-366,436, of which $2,807,823 was for death claims and $1,485,454 for matured endowments. Dividends to policyholders amounted to $1,152,-976. Fewer policies were surrendered in 1935, the amount paid in cash surrender value being $360,353 less than in 1934.

During 1935 new assurances were issued and paid for to the amount of $47,790,122, including revived policies. Total insurances in force at the end of 1935 amounted to $387,094,783.

In his remarks on the excellent report presented, Mr. G. S. Macdonald, president, referred to the fact that the Confederation Life Association is an international institution, carrying on business in twenty countries of the world, and with only a little less than one-half of its business coming from branches outside Canada.

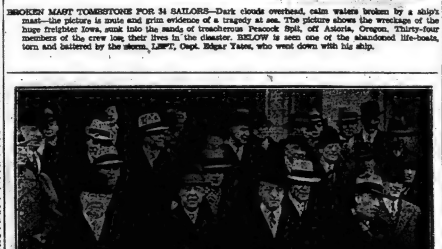
"The development of the life insurance business abroad by Canadian companies is something," said Mr. Macdonald, "of which all Canadians might well be proud, bearing evidence of the confidence which people of other countries have in the good faith and integrity of Canadian institutions. Loss of confidence in the determination of some of our legislatures and municipalities to fulfil their contractual obligations has undoubtedly hampered Canadian agency organizations operating outside of Canada."

Condemns Broken Obligations

"The year 1934 was good, but 1935 was better—an extraordinarily good one," was the comment of Mr. V. R. Smith, General Manager, on the progress of the Confederation Life Association during the past year. Business conditions, he said, have improved, and show every sign of further improvement in 1936.

"As we survey the events of 1935 and endeavour to look into the immediate future," said Mr. Smith, "we can say that our optimistic faith has been strengthened by the increasing evidences of business revival. At the same time we could do with more evidence on the part of some of our legislators that they appreciated where some of the economic financial proposals, seriously put forward, were leading us.

"Life insurance men are the employees of the thrifty, hired for the sole purpose of taking care of the hard-won savings of many people who sacrifice today that neither they, in their old age, nor their dependents in the event of their untimely deaths, become recipients of the charity of the State. Accordingly, we life insurance men, as custodians of the savings of the thrifty, owe it as a duty to them to focus attention upon the acknowledged fact that the way to prosperity and a higher standard of living does not lie in unbalanced budgets and ever-increasing taxation. Nor can that confidence, so necessary to an active and successful business, live in an atmosphere of governmental hostility to private enterprise or flourish in the shadow of broken faith in contractual public obligations.



"Repudiation is the glittering road that leads to destruction and I, for one, have faith that every Canadian, virile and independent as he is, desires to pay his debts and that he will willingly bear the necessary taxation, provided it is accompanied by strict retrenchment in public and social services and the iron determination to cease borrowing to cover deficits. What the future holds for us by way of taxation none of us knows, except that the burden will continue to grow unless our taxing authorities decide to live within their means. The deficits, still being incurred, must be met and paid, unless we are prepared to repudiate, and thus ruin our credit in the eyes of the world. An encouraging feature is that the Canadian people appear more alive today to the evils of ever-increasing taxation, of unbalanced budgets and of continued borrowing to cover deficits."

LORD TWEEDSMUIR TO LAUNCH NEW BOOK ASSOCIATION—Canada's popular author, Governor-General, Lord Tweedsmuir, will address the opening meeting of the newly-formed Association of Canadian Bookmen which they meet here on January 27. Lord Tweedsmuir, known to countless readers as John Buchan, was recently elected to the office of honorary president of the Canadian Authors' Club. Directors of the new Association of Canadian Bookmen have been drawn from the ranks of authors, critics and librarians since the first announcement of the association was made on November 4. Professor Pelham Edgar, national president of the Canadian Authors' Association, has been elected president of the association; B. K. Sandwell, editor of Saturday Night; Charles B. Sanderson, deputy chief librarian of the Toronto public libraries, and other outstanding figures in Canadian literary circles are among the officers. Purpose of the association is not only to raise the standard of taste among Canadian readers, but to make books more readily available to readers.

LABOR DELEGATES GIVE GOVERNMENT A FEW IDEAS—Every year before the opening of parliament it has become the practice of Canadian labor men to bring before the government recommendations in the interests of labor in Canada. The ABOVE group photo shows a section of the delegation which visited the parliament buildings at Ottawa last Wednesday. Some of the legislative measures urged were withdrawal of Section 98 of the criminal code, compulsory retirement at 60, and higher wage level for workers. It Was Branded "Polly"

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

Edith Leonard was very much annoyed that Dick could even hesitate to accept the offer of a position with the big trust company, which would mean a salary that would enable them to marry almost at once.

"If you stick to the work you're doing now," she said somewhat peevishly, "you will be puttering about with those patents forever and never get anywhere."

"But Edith, dear, if I take this position if will mean grind, grind, all the time at some one else's business and give me no time to work out my patents. I know if I could just get a start in selling some of the things I have been working on so long it would soon clear the deck for bigger things."

"You'll never make a lot of money inventing soups and can openers and little things like that."

"It's sometimes the little things that make the money," he said stubbornly. "Come,Edith, just give me another year and if I'm not marketing some of my ideas by that time I will give it all up and do as you think best. I have enough money saved now to start putting the soap on the market, and with just a little co-operation from some one who has faith in it — well, I just know it will prove a winner."

When Dick returned to his boarding house that evening he felt discouraged. Certainly the girl he loved gave no encouragement to the schemes dear to his heart.

Not so with little Polly, the daughter of his kind landlady. She was the mothering type of girl, who listened to everybody's troubles and always sent him away much the cheerier.

She had known for some time that their third-floor boarder had of late been worrying and she longed to know his troubles. He had not up to the evening in question confided his ambitions to her, but somehow his fast talk with Edith had cast him so far in spirit that he wanted to pour out his troubles to that soft-eyed Polly.

It was eleven o'clock and past Polly's bedtime when she and Dick turned out the sitting-room light and were to their downy couches, but Dick felt as if a new world had opened for him, and Polly seemed to know, without having told Dick so, that she was going to do something to help him in his life's ambition.

For with the true housewife's keen brain for anything which might lighten the work of the household, she had at once realised that Dick's patent soap for cleaning windows and mirrors and his wonderful can opener which opened the can without the usual amount of jarring rasings, were both most saleable articles.

And unknown to Dick she got hold of his formula for the soap, and, having got a supply of all that was necessary for the concoction thereof, Polly set to work to get out small sample cans of it.

"I want first to try it among some of my friends and see what they say," she told her mother, "and if it proves worth while I can book orders. And if housewives want it, it will be easy enough to get some of the grocers and shops to order soon."

"I believe you're right," said the mother who always added her help to any pet scheme of her daughter's. "I never had anything clean the mirrors so well and it would be grand for modern ice-water doesn't seem to blur the windows after using it. And that can opener is a dandy."

"Yes, it's a pity that we can't get a few made as samples, but I'll just have to take this one on my rounds and demonstrate it as I do the soap."

The orders Polly brought back during the following few weeks were not only flattering to Polly and the soap and the can opener, but they were quite beyond anything she had hoped for.

"We will put them on Dick's dressing table this evening," she whispered to her mother. For up to now in the proceedings Dick had been merely the man who held the patent rights. This scheme to put it on the market was still a surprise for him.

When he saw the pile or orders for soap and can openers on his dressing table he felt almost like shouting his joy.

He dashed down the stairs and into the private sitting room of Polly and her mother.

"I've never had anything quite so wonderful done for me in all my life," he said, somewhat shakily, "and it is all due to you two. I suppose we will have to form a company now, the three of us, and begin manufacturing. And the brand," he said, and looked long and happily at Polly, "shall be the Polly brand." He gazed at the two women who had made life different for him by their faith in him. All his dreams had come into being and he could now spend his energy and his brain power making good in the lines he loved.

"And I couldn't marry Edith now," he said softly, and slipped his hand into Polly's, and with his other arm encircled Polly's mother. "Everyone I love — is just right here. And the sooner we can form our company, which will include the mother of the bride, the bride and the groom, the happier we will be."

KING GEORGE BORNE HOME IN DEATH FOR LAST SAD RITES AT HEART OF EMPIRE

Old Fashioned Blizzard With Zero Temperature Blankets Countryside

City and Country Roads Blocked by Fourteen Inch Snowfall

12 BELOW IN CITY

Snowplows Out on Main and Branch Lines of C.N.R., Trains Half-Hour Late

Blizzard laden northern gales accompanied by below zero temperatures which whipped the city and district since early morning today following last night's heavy snow storm, added further to the blocked conditions of roads throughout, the rural districts of this area today.

In some sections traffic was reported at a standstill by a few truck drivers, with cars and trucks valiantly tackling the heavy drifts and swirling billows of snow fence high in many of the roads.

Although no official reports of conditions could be received from the northern townships by county road superintendent Simeon Fox, it was intimated that men and horse drawn scrapers were out early on the job of clearing the heavy drifted windrows at once.

Thirty-two mailed from the relief lists in the afternoon yesterday were put on the job of clearing streets in the city shortly after midnight by the department of public works, under the direction of city engineer Chas. Mark, and city foreman Cliff Mallory. Today a large force of men worked until noon, while a second shift will be called again to be called at midnight tonight. Winds, freighted with blue drifting snow, made the task of clearing the streets difficult. On Front Street the drifts that had been scraped to the side of the road were being shovelled into trucks and carted to the river and municipal dumping ground.

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Snowplows Out

Mt. Upton, Mich., Jan. 23 (AP)—Mrs. Jesse Mead, in the Straits of Mackinac, broke the distinction of being the oldest mother ever reported in 1935.

Mrs. Mead's mother, Charles Pierzi has reported there were no births and no deaths among the 180 Indians of the Island of the Village of Point Aux Pins during the year. Furthermore the records show that there were no marriages, no divorces, no criminal or civil suits involving residents of the island.

Pete Bruno is a mile from the nearest town, Cobequan.

Snowbound

Grand Fond, Ont., Jan. 23 (CP)—One man fell six feet and died. Others sheltered 36 feet and were rescued.

Sterling Dean, driver of the plane, told the story today of attempting to drive four of the injured to hospital. Their condition read down the Rogue River.

Dean said he found himself off a small bank and was lifted. Two men with broken legs were also dumped off the cliff. They were taken with mattresses and were then hauled with Dean's car.

Last Assault

Los Angeles, Jan. 23 (CP)—Mrs. Mary Ellen Pleasant, described in 35 years as a voodoo queen and servant girl, died today at the age of 115 years, one of 1,000 unexplained Guatemalan deaths in a Federal Theatre project.

Tom Christy, said a colored boy, was "the last of the family entitled to the flag."

Miss Hilpert, whose last starving vehicle, "The Last City," the Federal $1,000,000, said she hoped her steps are painted in a concrete walk on the legislature stage.

Snowplows in Service

Snow plows were called into service by the Canadian National Railways on their main and branch lines in order to facilitate the movement of freight and passenger traffic. In the main, however, difficulties were little affected by the driving drifts, some delay being noted.

Truck and transport drivers, wearied of battling the wind and snow help during the evening and the early hours of the morning with their vehicles in the city until some abatement of the storm was noted. Many of the drivers today, fearing complete disruption of their schedules, obtained permissions with the railway for their passengers to continue the trip west late last night.

The storm which continued over the two days left the heaviest blanket of snow behind in this city over a considerable period, with an average depth of from 12 to 14 inches registered.

Motorcycle Constable W. H. Delaney and Sam Ervins assisted in getting out highway snow plows, that operated all night keeping the highways open and this morning reported that all highways leading out of Belleville were passable for motor traffic, however. The blasting of the storm has subsided, but is slowly moving traffic seen on the highways.

The C.N.R. reported that snowplows were out on all lines and trains were maintaining schedules within half hour margins.

'I Am Resolved to Follow in the Way He Set Before Me'—King Edward VIII

London, Jan. 23—(AP)—King Edward VIII again today expressed his resolution to follow in the footsteps of his father, the late King George V, in serving the people and upholding the constitution.

A message from him was read by Prime Minister Baldwin to the House of Commons which reassembled at 2 p.m. previous to participating in services at Westminster Hall.

The King's message said:

"I am well assured that the Commons deeply mourns the death of my beloved father.

"He devoted his life to the service of his people and to upholding constitutional government. He was ever actuated with a profound sense of duty.

"I am resolved to follow in the way he has set before me."

KIPLING RESTS IN ANCIENT ABBEY

London, Jan. 23 (CP)—Rudyard Kipling was laid to rest today in the company of the immortals of England's literature.

In the dim and quiet by-way of Westminster Abbey's south transept, known for centuries as "the Poet's Corner", they placed the ashes of the bard of empire.

He dost in the shallow depth of earth below pavements trodden by many feet, by so many a great name, will mingle with the dust of Chaucer, Spenser, Johnson, Browning, Macaulay, Tennyson, Browning and Sir Leslie Stephen, England's king of letters.

Tenor Officiates

In a crowded Abbey, the Dean of Westminster, Dr. Foley Norris, conducted the funeral service, assisted by Rev. C. A. Alington.

Five tall-bearers were Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, cousin of the poet, Lord Rothermere, Sir Roger Keyes, Field Marshal Sir Archibald Montgomery-Massingberd, Sir Austen Chamberlain, the famous playwright, Maurice Baring, Sir Philip Sprat, C.B., M.P., editor of the Morning Post, A. R. Ramsay and A. S. Watt, Kipling's literary agent.

While the body of Kipling's late King-Emperor was being brought to London from Sandringham, the abbey's congregation sang hymns in memory of the first Prince Empire of India and of Empire were read the words of poet.

In the Abbey were Major-General Lionel Dunstarville, the poet's cousin, and Lt.-Col. A. Beresford, the original of MacTurk in the same book.

Ashes in Full-Sized Coffin

Around the purple-draped coffin, cast in the pavement by wreaths laid from a hundred patriotic hands, the ashes were gathered. The body was enclosed in a full-sized coffin and transported to Union Jack. It was first placed before the sanctuary steps, where the first part of the service was conducted.

The words and music of the service were those familiar throughout the British Empire, reminiscences were sung to Croft's setting followed by the 121st Psalm to a tune by celebrated chants.

The dean then read the customary prayers from the Commendatory Service.

Responsorial Sung

Meanwhile the congregation and mourners moved from the sanctuary to the Poets' Corner where the body was lowered and deposited.

Sir Kipling, leaning on her daughter and son-in-law, stood at the head of the little grave. Several prayers were then recited, one of which contained the words giving literary thanks for the life and work of Rudyard, our poet laureate.

While clergy and mourners returned to the sanctionary the words of Kipling's own "Recessional" went up to the ancient roof of the Abbey: "Lest we forget—lest we forget."

The Abbey bells rang a muffled peal at the conclusion of the service. Rudyard Kipling rests at the feet of Dryden in the Westminster Temple of the Empire.

ANGLERS OF BUCK GORE MERCHANT

Knocked From Wall, Inflicts Deep Lacerations on Head

STRATFORD, Ont., Jan. 23. — (CP)—Charles Hooper was recovering today from painful injuries suffered when he was gored by the antlers of a buck. Mr. Hooper was knocked from a ladder while in the dairy's business, Pat Hishon, a fellow employee, decided to wind the clock. His arm brushed against the mounted head of a large buck and a 12-pound "eight" came crashing down upon Mr. Hooper. One sharp antler inflicted a deep wound in his head. The other horn cut a deep gash through the eye, including the eye ball by a fraction of an inch.

Last Silver Dollar Will Bear Portrait Of Late King George

Ottawa, Jan. 23 (CP)—A new silver dollar, the last to bear the portrait of King George V, will be in circulation soon, it was learned today. Information today elicited the information that the necessary preliminary steps will appear in the near future. The machinery of the Royal Canadian Mint will then proceed to strike the new coin.

Canada's last silver dollar was struck specially to celebrate the jubilee of the late King. The new coin will be issued to supply the demand for silver dollars. As arrangements were made for the commemorative issue of the late King George was alive in 1936, the year of his jubilee, the new dollar will bear his portrait and not that of the present king. Coins issued after the death of the late King never bear the portrait of King Edward VIII.

Mediterranean Bloc Called 'Hostile Act'

Rome, Jan. 23 (CP)—Britain's organization of the "low-power Mediterranean bloc, as announced yesterday by the League of Nations was characterized today as "an act of hostility and attempt at aggression" by the Italian press.

Without recourse to any league decision and without French support, Great Britain took and developed against Italy an initiative which from the political point of view amounts to an act of hostility and an attempt at aggression," the newspaper declared.

CAN OPENER HELPS WITH $100,000,000

Chicago, Jan. 23 (AP)—The lowly can opener was performing today the cutting a channel through which almost $100,000,000 more flowed into the pocketbooks and trade marts during 1935 than in 1934. Never before in peacetime history has so much gold been paid by United States housewives use so much canned food as last year, said Carlos Campbell, of Washington, director of the statistical bureau of the National Canners Association.

Royal Family Attends Lying in State Services

London, Jan. 23—The body of King George V was brought to London this afternoon for four days lying-in-state at the heart of his empire.

Only a few hours earlier, a sad farewell had been taken of the dead sovereign at Sandringham, where his reign came to an end just before midnight Monday.

The royal funeral train pulled into the specially erected platform at Cross station at 2.45 p.m. while tens of thousands of Britons packed the streets silently.

They stood, waiting silently and mournfully in the chill air, to pay their last tribute of reverence to the man they had honored in life with loyalty.

All Services in Guard

An honor guard from the three fighting services—the army, the navy and air force—slightly at attention, the purple-covered catafalque bearing the coffin from the black and purple funeral coach.

The Grenadiers guard of honor, a regular army artillery caisson for the procession through the streets of the London of yesterday and today.

Prime Minister Baldwin told the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, and with appropriate pomp and ceremony next year," indicating a full year will elapse before the coronation.

Imperial Crown on Coffin

The gun-carriage which rumbled into position outside the railroad station on the freshly-sanded driveway was the same one which had conveyed the body of Queen Victoria, King Edward VII, to its burial place.

Atop the coffin rested the Imperial Crown, glittering in the splendor of its 2,000 diamonds and other precious stones, and supported by purple pomp and cushions.

It was one of the rare times when the public has had the opportunity of viewing the symbol of monarchy in the streets.

The new King Edward assisted his mother, the widowed Queen Mary, to alight from the train.

King Was Pale

Then he fell beside his three brothers, the Duke of York, Gloucester and Kent, and the Earl of Harewood, husband of the Princess Royal, for the sad walk of the day behind the coffin.

King in Tears Following Body Of Late Father

Sandringham, Jan. 23 (CP-Havas)—Tears filled the eyes of King Edward VIII today as he walked behind the gun carriage bearing the body of his father to Wolferton Station.

He mastered his emotion at the head of the procession, a group of press photographers and presented an expressionless face when the cortege started.

His three brothers looked straight ahead, too, permitting no sign of emotion to appear on their faces.

8 Months Ago!

London, Jan. 23 (CP) — In the great hall of William Rufus, lords and Commoners passed silently by the black-draped catafalque today in last tribute to King George V, the monarch who gave a new meaning to the name of king.

Only eight months before His Majesty had gone to Westminster Hall to receive congratulations from both Houses on completion of the twenty-fifth year of his reign.

It was a procession of deep historic meaning. He had stood without a care or a fear upon his head, for upon his shoulders lay the weight of state.

And today in the hall of mourning there were echoes lingering also of his memorable words: "Freedom for the individual, an ordered strength of state and the rule of law over governors and governed alike . . . I pray that we may continue to preserve the cause of freedom and progress in the spirit of peace and tolerance and understanding."

That bright May day marked another milestone in his growth and parliament. Now the remains of the King lay beneath the "rafters of medieval oak, silent witnesses of historic tragedies."

Hope Revived for Cure of Pernicious Anaemia by Discovery New Substance

Chicago, Jan. 23—(AP)—A new method of treating pernicious anaemia, based on a theory the disease is caused by a lack of a single unknown substance in the gastric juices, was announced today by Dr. R. A. Greenspon, of Montreal.

It consisted of preparations of gastric juice and animal stomach linings from which were removed their natural pepsin, the digestive agent which Dr. Greenspon said killed the action of the anti-pernicious anaemia substance.

Dr. Greenspon described his treatment, which he said could be administered by mouth or hypodermic injection, as a simplification of one explored earlier by Dr. W. B. Castle, notable experiments in this field.

Castle held nature prevented pernicious anaemia normally through a substance secreted by the gastric juices and from the stomach walls. He concluded it was necessary for this substance to combine with an other, probably a protein, to be effective.

His treatment therefore consisted of a preparation of gastric juices and ground beef.

Dr. Greenspon said his experiments showed that untreated gastric juices very ineffective because the pepsin counteracted the anti-pernicious anaemia agent. The use of protein used by Castle combined with the pepsin and thus removed the eye ball by a fraction of an inch.

Missile, Believed Meteoric, Misses St. Thomas Man by Just a Few Inches

St. Thomas, Ont., Jan. 23.—(CP)—Smith, St. Thomas baker, believes he was almost struck by a falling meteorite last Friday. He told his story today.

The occurrence is not very clear to him yet, says Smith, for he recalls hearing a sound for the fraction of a second then a loud explosion and a blinding flash, a shower of sparks around his feet and out over the ground for an area of three feet or so.

Smith, 48, a bachelor, lives alone in the house where the missile is said to have landed there was a "dent" about two and a half inches in diameter and a little more than an inch deep for many feet were small particles that looked like ground up clinker.

WESTMINSTER HAS A LONG HISTORY

Hall Where Body of King Lies in State Is Part of Palace

New York, Jan. 23 (AP)—Westminster Hall, in which the body of King George V will lie in state tomorrow until next Monday, is a part of the Royal Palace of Westminster, commonly called the Houses of Parliament.

The hall is in the west wing of the Palace, which is not far from Westminster Abbey, but is connected with the Abbey. The House of Commons, near to the hall, is in the northern half of the Palace, while the House of Lords is in the southern half.

The original Westminster Hall was finished in 1099, but little of the building remains except for the walls, which have modern linings.

King Richard II, in 1396, installed a magnificent oaken roof in the hall, with a span of 67 feet, six inches without any intermediate support. Construction of this roof presented a problem, which hitherto had not been successfully handled.

In 1822, restoration of the roof was completed after it was discovered, that beetles had hollowed out some of the main collar beams. Steel reinforcement was adopted for supporting the roof structure.

Westminster Hall is especially memorable as the scene of the condemnation of Charles I in 1649. He was convicted of treason and was beheaded.

Richard II was deposed there in 1399.

Among those condemned to death in the hall were Guy Fawkes, convicted in a plot to blow up the Parliament Building in 1605, and Sir Thomas More, who refused to renounce the Pope and agree to the accession of Anne Boleyn in 1535.

Mussolini is Fascism, His Aim to Raise Prestige Of Italians as Nation

Possession of Colonial Empire Sought Only Because Big Powers Have Colonies, is View Dr. W. A. Mackintosh of Queen's University Expresses at Chamber of Commerce Lecture

"Mussolini is not seriously interested in the raw materials in new lands. He is interested in colonies because they are the things first-possessed. His aim is trying to raise Italian prestige, make the Italians and others believe they are a first rate power," declared Dr. W. A. Mackintosh, head of the Department of Commerce and Administration of Queen's University in the opening lecture of the series on "Trade or Citizenship" sponsored by the Belleville Chamber of Commerce. Dr. Mackintosh spent last year in Italy and his subject "Italy and Mussolini" is one of the results of his observations made during that experience.

Dr. Mackintosh had a novel point of attack on the subject and that his psychological study of the Italian people and Il Duce himself was appealing, we will do it major credit to explain so many of the problems concerning the Italy of today. Dr. Mackintosh, a son of the late Inspector of Schools William Mackintosh who made his home in Madoc, has a pleasing delivery, which is not rapid but allows the subject matter to be absorbed.

Rise of Hitler

"Only in the last three or four years has the opportunity offered to raise the prestige and power of Italy," the speaker continued. "One cause is the rise of Hitler in Germany. France which was armed, did not pay much attention to Italy but Hitler began to arm. France looked to Italy and began to appreciate the Italian menace. France and Italy settled their differences a year ago and Mussolini began to play for power part. The conference with Britain and France at Stresa pleased the Italians as it showed great powers coming to Italy with Mussolini after the head of the table. They felt that they had arrived as a great nation."

"Mussolini thought he saw a chance in East Africa to bolster up his own prestige—Europe will be over by the possession of a colonial empire. As Germany was not yet armed and France leaned towards Italy, Mussolini took the plunge in Ethiopia.

Miscalculated Europe

"Mussolini miscalculated the temper of Europe and the strength of British public opinion and of the League of Nations. So he has got into a situation which may lead to trouble but one out of which Italy may have to gain much. Mussolini is not rich. The question is will Italian morale break down. In Italy there is opposition to Mussolini but there is grave misgiving." The average Italian sees in Mussolini the symbol of Italian prestige.

Dr. Mackintosh in opening the lecture said that the man and the time have synchronized as every one in a while in history. Such a man is Mussolini. Italy, the professor said, had not really realized its power to recently Italian royalty did not dare visit Sicily. The trouble was that there was little public sentiment in Italy, politics were corrupt and national affairs attracted no interest. Italy haggled on the price of entry into the Great War and the country had gained little prestige in the war. One great defeat by the Austrians, the Italians felt, gave them poor advertising as soldiers lacking discipline. Italy had added much and got little out of the war. She received no colonies though Italy better Britain gave her a little strip of land in East Africa. Strikes broke out at demobilization. The government was weak and hesitant.

Mussolini Rise

This was Mussolini's chance. After a turbulent youth the North Italian native became a socialist. In 1914 he was ardent for entry into the war against the Central Powers. He was wounded in action. After the war he grew interested in returned soldiers' organizations from which the Fascisti rose. The Italian middle class swung to its assistance because of fear of Bolshevism, and he became married by a property class and a middle class. The movement became a party, had members elected to Parliament, and finally the Fascists demanded the premiership for Mussolini. Then in 1922 began the Fascist march on Rome to force on the government the choice of Mussolini. The King gave in and put into his hands and called Mussolini who had stayed in Milan, to become prime minister. Only the weakness of the government made the march a success for the Fascists were not strong.

"What is Fascism?" asked Dr. Mackintosh. He said it was wrapped up in a rough medley of vague meaning. Six three or four points stand out clearly, though Fascism is not a unified body of thought. These points are (1) It assigns chief power to the state and not the individual none. This is designed to achieve unity of the people. (2) Fascism denies democratic organization. It demands organization from the top downward. The Fascists claim that only a few may be right and so are contemptuous of systems operating on majorities. But Fascism has no way to tell who is right. In practice Mussolini often quotes Machiavelli. The element of force is a mark of Fascism. Fascist demands the validity of rational judgments—it ignores the mass of the people—so, able to make right judgments. Fascists claim it would be wrong if they did because men act mostly by intuitive understanding. Hence they ignore the psychology of the mass of action. (4) Fascism stresses the need for discipline as the keynote of the power of nations. Mussolini talks of the disciplined will. The question of Fascism is believe, obey, work, fight.

Fascism is Mussolini

"The more you look at Fascism the more you come to the conclusion that Fascism is nothing more than Mussolini himself," said Dr. Mackintosh. "He is undoubtedly one of the great dramatic personalities of history. Mussolini is a disciplinarian of life with him. He must dominate else he could scarcely live. He must be dissatisfied, without patriotism, with the point of view of the parish pump, with any sense of public honesty, full of political and social intrigues.

His ambition was to remake the Italians. He saw them as he thought they might be as a disciplined people instead of a delightful and easy-going people. He was ready to use force to do this, though not so anxious as others to use force.

"He ranks as a great use of myths in national history, something a half-Latin a tradition embroidered by emotion until it becomes a symbol. There is the myth that Julius Caesar is a hero and the direct descendant of the Romans of old, the myth that Italy is destined to obtain a new place of Nome in the ancient world. Accordingly there must be new colonies, a new Roman Empire.

Changes in Italy

"He tells the Italians they are the greatest of all people. He says all history is leading up to Fascism. Italy must now at the past were really Fascists without knowing it.

Dr. Mackintosh said in the sense of dictatorship Fascism had accomplished a great deal. Blackmail of the Italian people has disappeared, a traffic officer in Italy is so extraordinarily rigorous that he practically holds up the traffic as people stop to watch the Swedish gymnastics he goes through.

Life has become more serious. There is less joking, less singing in the street, less amiable fighting. Cities are cleaned up, streets widened, public health has greatly improved, children are trained.

The whole nation has been starved for appreciation, remarked the lecturer, and has felt that no one appreciated it. Mussolini by building up the prestige of himself, builds up Italian sense of importance. He has the task of dominating his own party and all Italy. There is no doubt of his complete domination of Italy by his own prestige. Now he has set up the Corporate system in Italy. This East African war is largely a projection of Mussolini to the world arena. Mussolini excels in every form of interest and activity, his physique and personality aid this prestige. The Italian people have the temper and has the strength. He helps the myth along by holding seven or eight governments posts. He has great intellectual ability and has everything the Italians can hope to be.

Mr. J. O. Herity introduced Mr. Mackintosh. Mr. R. Bernstein presided. The meeting was largely attended. Mr. Geo. Sloan expressed appreciation to the lecturer.

At the opening of the meeting there was a moment of silence as the audience stood and at the close the National Anthem was sung.

WEIRD STORY IS TOLD BY WOMAN

Says Her Abductor Dropped, While Walking Along Street

Windsor, Ont., Jan. 22 (CP)—The weird story of being compelled to open the door to Detroit by a man, who threatened to shoot her husband if she refused and of being kidnapped from her abductor when the latter dropped dead, while walking with her on the street, was told by Mrs. Lorenda Solomon, 30-year-old mother of three children.

Windsor detectives investigating the story were unable to learn anything about the mysterious John Harrison, whom Mrs. Solomon claims was her captor. Neither police nor officials at the hospital could supply information corroborating the woman's story.

Mrs. Solomon said Harrison, whom she met in a Detroit beer garden Halloween night, urged her to run away with him. Last Thursday he appeared at her home with a gun and announced he would shoot her husband if she refused to go with him.

For four days, she said, she was held a prisoner in a room in a house about eight blocks from the border. On the fifth day during that time she had food only twice. He also tried to choke her, she said.

She said she went out for a walk with Harrison and while waiting on the curb for a street light to change the man collapsed and died. Pretending she did not know the man, she left him in care of other passers-by and came back to Windsor.

Murderer Sends Letter of Greeting To B.Hauptmann

Budapest, Hungary, Jan. 22 (AP)—Ladislaus Siepest, put to death in a triple execution today, spent the last hours of his life writing a letter of "greeting" to Bruno Richard Hauptmann in the United States.

The letter, which he penned in a prison cell while the executioner's scaffold was being erected in the prison courtyard, was addressed to the "Lindbergh baby murderer."

Siepest, hanged with two companions for the murder of a fellow employee, gave the sealed letter an official so he started to walk the gallow's steps.

He said it was a "greeting from one condemned man to another."

The prosecuting officer said letter might be destroyed unopened because he saw "no good purpose in sending it to America," for delivery to the convicted slayer of Lindbergh baby.

KIPLING'S PLACE IN ABBEY

In the great Abbey of Westminster, the great religious shrine of Britain, hallowed with the passage of centuries will soon (the ashes of Rudyard Kipling, The) national shrine will be enriched with the presence of the mortal remains of one who sang patriotism, who lived a life which any Englishman, Scotsman, Welshman or Irishman or any inhabitant of any portion of the Empire might desire to lead.

It is so easy to refuse place of greatness to those who are near us in time, one reason of course being that time has a winnowing effect which sifts the lasting from the temporal in all forms of art, and then again it is the sad story of the prophet in his own country or of the Aesop fable of acquaintance breeding contempt. Of course in Rudyard Kipling's place there is no contempt but only honour shown him except from some few who attacked his imperial attitude. But Kipling was no militarist. He gave a voice to the present day Empire, a voice which will doubtless endure. All ages have not possessed so great a writer as he.

Kipling has left behind him a personal name which should be a model to all men. He was ever alive towards life's problems. He was deeply religious and loved his fellow men.

In the Abbey the great poet will be in the glorious company of England's dead. Another temple of Britain's dead is St. Paul's and another is the final resting place of monarchs.

Not all of England's great writers have set up their everlasting rest in Westminster Abbey. The greatest of them all, Shakespeare, lies in the parish church by the peaceful Avon, the stream near which he doubtless played as a boy in those formative years which mean so much to a man's future life. Keats and Shelley sleep under Italian skies. The many places about the British Isles are to be found shrines or resting places of her great creative dead.

RULES FOR FEAR

Halifax Chronicle points to the rule of fear which has returned in Europe. "Men whisper to one another in the streets of Italy. In Germany men loom up and down and all about before they venture to say a word." And on the other side is the picture of life in Canada. "Here we fear nobody and only understand the freedom we enjoy by contrasts with lands where it is seiped out." Then the Chronicle applies the rule which has been worked out many times in history—the rule of life which ultimately causes the rule of fear to depart. "In the conflict between autocracy and democracy there is no question about the ultimate issue, for while men driven by the compulsion of fear may go far they cannot compete with men who cringe under no fear but with hope of a future, together to whatever duty may be theirs to do."

How fortunate Canadians as British subjects are to live in a land and under a sway which does not depend upon fear and force! How fortunate are they that the very constitution and the elements which make in the British people will not permit this domination. Whispering in the streets in fear of being spied upon to bring one into trouble with the powers that be! Instead of this we have the freedom allowed in public speech—a freedom which is a safety valve under the British system!

THE KING

Rochester Democrat and Chronicle

Through the shock of world change that began in 1914 people kept his head and his dignity. It was recalled at the time of his jubilee celebration last year that only four sovereigns of 1910 were still in power. While kings and rulers fell all around him—most of them from the pressure of discontent—King George remained one of the solid fixtures in a disordered world. Yet even within his own empire, the impetus of change was working in Canada, in India, in Australia, in Ireland. Autonomous "dominions" grew up where "dependencies" had existed before.

It was a distinctive achievement of King George to represent the simpler virtues of the British people, the while he represented the pageantry and pomp of his British empire. For with such his quiet pressure contributed to the history of his times, the world does not yet know. British kings are no longer physical leaders of an earlier day; they rule by encouragement and counsel, by good example and precept. Yet no one think this is an easy role. The long record of English kings is liberally checkered by weaklings or despots who shamed their high place.

King George did not shame it. While rulers in other lands were striking at the heart of democracy, he kept the eyes of the British people—of democratic peoples, everywhere, in fact—on the ideals of self government of which, by that paradox of the British system, he was the symbol. More, he felt and recognized the ties that bind the English and American people; he did much to promote the good will and understanding that exists between them.

"People of America," while they more fully understand the devotion of the British people to their royal family, will understand the sorrow that has come to them in the death of a beloved national figure. And in the traditional spirit they will hail the new king, whom also they know and like from intimate contact, and to him will send their best wishes for health, long life and a prosperous reign.

EIGHT PRESENTATIONS OF "MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY" in Belleville before large audiences was just another tribute to the worth of that picture play which has been a "best seller" both as a book and a moving picture. It might be added that "Mutiny on the Bounty" is just another triumph for Great Britain in the cinema world for it is a British story through and through with British characters and atmosphere throughout, although Hollywood filmed. The United States went for "Mutiny on the Bounty" in a big way, and this consistency just another of a long and growing list of British inspired or produced plays which have taken the United States by storm.

Belleville folks who witnessed the play may be interested to know that descendants of Capt. Bligh objected very strenuously to the cruel character given to the old sea dog in the picture, contending that while he was very strict he was not as cruel as pictured. Perhaps not, but officers and sailors of His Majesty's Navy, even in those days, would hardly mutiny and cut themselves off forever from their family and friends at home because of a naval captain's strictness, if that were all.

Charles Laughton, with his loose alsbery lips and shifty eyes certainly gives a wonderful depiction of an old-time bulldozing sea captain, more devil than man, who believed in inspiring fear in his subordinates instead of respect with the cat-o-nine tails and worse. So real was his acting that most of the audiences would cheerfully have murdered him on sight. So general was this feeling that it is related that an incident occurred in Toronto where comigs out from witnessing Bligh's vileness a man, steaming with the fury of it, was accosted by a friend who asked him how he liked the play. Without a word the first mentioned drew off and smote his interrogator in the nose, thus releasing his pent-up emotions.

Not much, if anything, can be said in extenuation of the character of Captain Bligh, except that he had courage a-plenty and was a master of the art of hard-driving sea-dog with the utmost contempt for common sailors, spewed up by the press-gang, most of them tavern bums and criminals. It was the contrast in the inferior food for the crew and the place the difference to the captain's account, a practise which resulted in rotten meat and mouldy biscuits beside the inferior rations all round. Captain Bligh lived to become involved in another mutiny, the event which really started the reform in the British navy. A number of officers were seized by the mutineers and the officers put ashore, including Captain Bligh. Poor food, low wages and cruelty were the chief reasons for the mutiny which altered to the depths the hardshells of Parliament and led to close enquiry and radical reforms.

Captain Bligh was educated in a hard school and is only admirable part of his character as depicted in the movies is the fact that he was a brave man, and the fact that he made a 3,500 miles journey in an open boat to make the world of water unsafe for Christian Fletcher and the Mutineers of the Bounty, and the satisfaction of seeing several of the alleged mutineers hung from the yard-arm. This story of the wonderful voyage of Captain Bligh and his associates 3,500 miles in an open boat is well told in "Men Against the Sea", while the final story of the mutineers is told in "Pitcairn Island", telling the last days of Fletcher Christian, and the sorrow and pain which came to him through the foolishness of his fellow mutineers and their appetite for strong drink. Fletcher Christian lived always in the haunting dread of the arrival of a warship to take the mutineers back to England and punishment, and the shadow of the yard-arm and rope lay always across his path. In fact he established a refuge far up in a cave on the cliff where he would make his last stand, the approach to which was a narrow ledge along which only one man could go forward at a time. And in this eagle's eyrie death came to him at long last, after his drunken associates had inflamed the passions of the natives who accompanied them from Tahiti by stealing their women and trying to enslave the men, resulting in wholesale slaughter of the white population. The entire tale is pathetic and sad to the last degree, well told by the authors Nordhoff and Hall.

"Daysgring" owned by W. Parks, of Belleville and driven by Nat Ray established two world's records at Mount Royal track, Montreal, yesterday afternoon, the opening day of the initial fee meet of the Black River Jockey Club. "Daysgring" stepped the fastest mile that has ever been recorded on an ice track, pacing the distance in 2.18 3-4 while the previous best was paced by him in 2.19 1-2; 2.19 1-2 is a full second better than the previous record, while the time for the three heats is the best that has ever been shown on ice. "Daysgring" is a great horse and his performance was a most creditable one."

THE WEST SHIVERS UNDER COLD WAVE

41 Degrees Below Zero Reported at Winnipeg

Winnipeg, Jan. 23.—(CP)—Shivering in wintry blasts, Winnipeg citizens today turned a quizzical eye to the weatherman's official recording of temperature but cocked a frozen ear to his forecast that relief from the seven-week cold wave of the winter was in sight.

The Meteorological Bureau gave the lowest registration here this morning as 41 below zero, two degrees warmer than yesterday when the season's low record of minus 43 was established.

But scores of downtown thermometers whose owners they were "reliable", recorded from 50 to 53 degrees below zero. Telegraph companies reported the readings on their instruments as 53 below; fire department records showed 51.

Brandon, Man., and Kenora, Ont., were officially the coldest spots in the West today, each with minus 44 readings.

No deaths from the cold have been reported but at Kenora, Hubert Wiseman, a wood-cutter, was recovering from a hazardous experience of being lost in dense bush with temperatures around 30 below zero.

Wiseman built fires and kept on the move throughout the night and with daylight was able to make his way to safety. He walked between two fires all night, burning his clothes in his efforts to keep warm.

SENATE PASSES SOLDIERS' BONUS

Washington, Jan. 23 (AP)—Immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus was voted today by the United States Senate.

Overwhelming House acceptance of the Senate's baby bond-payment plan, with its ultimate $2,491,000,000 cost, completed Congressional action. The measure will go to the White House—and a possible veto—as soon as Speaker Byrnes and Vice President Garner sign it.

The bill provides for payment of adjusted service certificates of 3,500,000 Great War veterans in $50 bonds, starting June 15. Veterans preferring to hold the certificates would draw three per cent interest annually from June 15, 1937 to June 15, 1945.

NERVES ARE CUT AND REJOINED BY SPINNING PROCESS

Study of Nerve Make-up Aided in New Experiments

Urbana, Ill., Jan. 22.—(AP)—Nerves have been taken apart for the first time and put back together again like artificial silk at the University of Illinois.

The spinning method was disclosed today as identical with that used in the manufacture of rayon. The experiments were performed in the laboratories of Dr. Gregory D. Clark, internationally known chemist.

The nerves are tiny tubes, he said, with two components: An outer sheet or membrane, and the fluid. The fluid—a "gooey" substance, like the white of egg—is the transmitting line along which nerve impulses flow. It is a long chain of protein molecules.

Dr. Clark explained the sheath acts as an electrical condenser for the fluid, which has been likened by most of the electrical nerve impulse lines to a chemical reaction.

Discovery of the sheath's function was of primary importance, the scientist asserted, because it is the greatest knowledge of nerve disease.

Stirling and District

Stirling—The church parlours of St. Paul's United Church were filled to capacity with an interested audience on Tuesday evening to listen to a very educational address on the native life of the people of Angola, West Africa, where a mission station is maintained by the home church of the United Church of Canada, and to observe the many lovely slides made from pictures taken by the lecturer on his recent visit there. The speaker was Dr. C. W. Rideout, editor of New Outlook, church organ of the United Church of Canada. Dr. Rideout recently returned from a visit to Angola, Africa, and while there made use of knowledge of photography and with a special camera was enabled to secure a large number of coloured pictures and character studies of the natives of that part of the world. Dr. Rideout took this trip at his own expense and because of that was enabled to make a careful study of the existing conditions there. Dealing with the characteristics of the primitive natives the speaker pointed out that their most tasty morsel was a fine large fat caterpillar and served in the fire the audience groaned audibly he asking what was the difference between a caterpillar and an oyster, for which many in the civilized world are so fond. The scenic beauty revealed by many of the slides shown was remarkable. A man interested in the study of native life would be taken up greatly with the study of the army ants of this area which move from place to place in great columns which take hours and hours to pass a given point. An interesting experience for the lecturer was to view the movements of a snake eighteen feet in length.

The manner of identification of the native is accomplished by some painful bodily injury administered in the days of childhood.

One tribe would have as its mark of identification horrible scars on the faces of all its members, other teeth filed to a sharp point, and other the extraction of the two front teeth. Intermarriage of the various tribes are subject to many ridiculous superstitions causing pain and suffering of the very worst type. These poor unfortunate people are being lifted from conditions of insanity, where the majority die before reaching manhood and womanhood, only because the Christ of Galilee now walks the trails of Africa. This was one of the most interesting lectures given in the Presbyterian Church in charge of a subject that was greatly different. At the conclusion of the lecture Dr. Rideout conducted a question period and many of the audience were enlightened on conditions regarding Africa which had puzzled them for many years.

The Central Hastings Ministerial Association met Monday afternoon at the home of Rev. and Mrs. A. S. McConnell. Among those present were Rev. E. W. Rowland, Rev. and Mrs. James Lawson, Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Foley of Springside, Canon Sowerby and Mrs. Swayne of Bonarlaw, Mrs. H. C. Ellis and Mrs. H. H. Alger were guests of the Association at this meeting.

The afternoon was taken up in an open discussion on various topics introduced by the ministers. Many subjects of great interest to all clergymen were discussed in a constructive fashion and all privileged to be present enjoyed and loyed the gathering. Tea was served at the conclusion of the program by the hostess.

St. Paul's Young People's Association

The regular weekly meeting of St. Paul's Young People's Association was held in the church parlour on Monday evening with a large attendance on hand. The meeting was opened by Miss Mary Hall, president of the organization, with the singing of a hymn to the honor of the late Robert Burns. Rev. E. W. Rowland led the gathering in prayer. The Scripture lesson for the evening was found in the nineteenth Psalm and was read responsively. The remaining portion of the program was directed by Miss Helen Mallory, leader of the Literary Division of the Society. Mr. Ross Johnston offered a most pleasing violin solo accompanied at the piano by Miss Mae Currie.

The main number on the evening was the reading of the second section of the organization paper, The Blue Outlook by the editor Mr. Harry Hulin. The journal contained a large variety of choice clippings and also several articles with a personal touch concerning several of the members of the organization. It was compiled in a very interesting fashion and contained a wealth of constructive and educational material as well as plenty of good humour and sound philosophy. One of the most interesting articles was an editorial on the "Man Who Looks like My Home Town". With his splendid attempt the editor of this interesting journal proved that he possesses a remarkable talent for journalistic work and the organization will look forward to the reading of the next issue with a great deal of interest. At the close of the program the room was cleared of chairs and a series of lively games indulged in by all present. Many of these games were of an original type and were directed by Miss Helen Mallory. The meeting was closed with the Mispah Benediction.

FRIGID WAVE HITS MIDWESTERN BELT

25 Persons in Ten States Snuffed by Sahara Weather

Chicago, Jan. 23 (AP)—The worst frigid wave of many seasons swept the Midwestern belt of America today and snuffed out the lives of at least twenty-five persons in 10 states. The great midwest belt and the northeastern sections bore the brunt of the cohorts' wave.

The freakish frigidity closed schools and factories, halted auto and mobile traffic, blocked or delayed rail transportation, broke innumerable plate glass windows, caused widespread hardship, immeasurable loss, hundreds of traffic accidents and intense suffering for birds and beasts.

The weather was not entirely without good, for it brought higher prices in the grain and livestock markets, jammed hotels with suburbanites too timid to risk the journeys home, boosted coal and clothing merchants with rush orders and caused a severe shortage in the earmuff, scarf and mitten industries.

The coldest temperature in the United States today was 35 below zero at International Falls, Minn., on the Canadian border.

School children were marooned in a dozen Chemical Point, Ont. pupils were marooned for several hours before half of them were rescued. One other pupil spent the night with 14 teachers in Stanton school, near Troy. There will be no school session for 14,000 Hamilton County youngsters and most other Indiana schools will be closed today.

Near Cynthiana, Ky., 180 children were obliged to remain in school over night. A school bus was ditched at Prewitte, Wisc., and the children spent the night at nearby farm houses. Janitors of Milwaukee schools were ordered to remain on duty all night to insure warm quarters today.

Chicago and many suburban schools were ordered closed. In the country schoolhouses near Waukegan, Ill., 30 pupils were held in the buildings for several hours after the heating plant failed. Some of the younger children were in danger of freezing before deputy sheriffs and State Police broke through the snowdrifts to rescue them.

Schools were closed also in sections of Minnesota, Michigan, Iowa, Indiana and Pennsylvania.

Explosive Stronger Than Nitroglycerine

IOWA CITY, Iowa, Jan. 22.—(AP)—Prof. Richard Bartow, of the chemistry staff here, explained yesterday a new economical process for manufacture of hostol, a compound which can be made into an explosive more powerful than nitroglycerine.

Professor Bartow, president of the American Chemical Society, said he believed the compound could be produced for commercial use from waste materials in the manufacture of corn products.

SALUTE FIRED AT KINGSTON

Kingston, Ont., Jan. 23—(CP)—Royal salutes of 21 guns, in honor of His Majesty King Edward VIII, was fired at noon yesterday at Fort Henry and immediately the flags in the American Chemical Society, said he believed the compound could be to remain until sundown.

KING EDWARD FOLLOWS AFOOT

He had died on the anniversary day of six and three-quarters centuries earlier when Simon de Montfort summoned the first English parliament to meet in the same hall.

Heaven Hard by Ottawa

Today, before leaving their own chambers for Westminster Hall, the Lords and Commons alike adopted addresses of sympathy with King Edward VIII's widowed Scottish mother.

When the Commons assembled the speaker and other officers in full dress uniforms while the members were in deep mourning. The benches were crowded when Premier Stanley Baldwin announced he had a message from King Edward and read it in his own hand. It was read by Captain A. A. Plurry, speaker.

The king's message was followed by speeches by Mr. Baldwin and C. R. Attlee, leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition.

Prime Minister Baldwin proposed an address conveying the sympathy of the Commons to King Edward, assuring him that Lady Asquith's example of unselfish devotion and public service will be remembered with affectionate remembrance. He also proposed a message of condolence to Queen Mary.

Premier's Words.

In the course of his speech Mr. Baldwin mentioned that the new king would be crowned with appropriate pomp and ceremony in Westminster Abbey next year. He declared the king's achievements and the coming to terms of democracy with monarchy, existing as such in system which, he believed, gave a stability to the body politic which most countries would give all they have possessed to have.

While the temporal power of the crown was not only the link holding together the British Empire but maintaining force of the whole empire of English speaking peoples. It was also the indissoluble link holding the myriad peoples of India.

How King Met Changes.

King George met the challenge of the greatest and most difficult years that have taken place in history. He met them unflinchingly and triumphed at a time when a slip of speech or action might have wrought irreparable harm. King George never considered his own ease or leisure, decided for Prime Minister and his instinct of the people's desires was sure. His sense of duty to the throne amounted to genius."

The King's power of influence for good was enhanced by a million ways by his companionship with the Queen. Their home life was great personal sympathy with the Queen, a sympathy far removed from the commercial.

King Edward brings to the throne a personality richly endowed with experience in public affairs and the fruits of universal travel and goodwill. He has a wide knowledge of all classes, not only in Britain but throughout the Dominions and India, than any of his predecessors, concluded Mr. Baldwin.

Following the Prime Minister, Mr. Attlee, parliamentary leader of the Labor Opposition, declared: "There is no division in this House today. We are all united in sorrow at the loss of our great and well-loved Sovereign. We are all united by the deepest sympathy with the Queen and other members of the royal family.

Duties of Sovereign

It was sorrow, he continued which was felt in every home in Great Britain. The whole nation was in mourning. All felt they had lost a friend.

Two things were required from a Sovereign, said Mr. Attlee, sympathy with ideas and a readiness to accept change, and (2) the ability to do so as a living proof of stability. These two things, Mr. Attlee declared, King George possessed in full measure. He was a Democrat with supreme knowledge of the difficult art of constitutional kingship.

Sir Archibald Sinclair, for the opposition Liberals added his tribute, after which addresses were declared carried unanimously.

No Resident Here Under 5 Sovereigns

Belleville, as far as known, contains no resident at the present old enough to have qualified as having lived under the reign of five Sovereigns. A checkup of the local population failed to reveal a reveals that Mr. Amos Tuttle, venerable resident, who died during the past many years who died about a month ago at the ripe old age of 99 would have been the only qualifying candidate had he lived. The longest living resident of the home who can be certain qualify are the ruler eighty years of age.

Had Mr. Tuttle been alive today he would point to the personal fact of being a resident of Canada under the rules of the late King William 4th; then Queen Victoria, Edward VII, King George V, and present King Edward VIII.

Queen Victoria ascended the throne in 1837.

WILL KING VISIT ALBERTA RANCH?—King Edward VIII still owns a ranch in Alberta, and, according to its manager, Prof. W. L. Carlyle, the new King, who last visited the ranch in 1927 as Prince of Wales, remarked that "even a King needs a holiday." The inference was that King Edward may defy precedent and visit his ranch again. His Majesty is here shown astride his horse in true cowboy style on one of his visits to "Bar" ranch.

TORONTO INDUSTRIALS

Toronto, Jan. 23 (CP)—Volume and prices continued strong in the oils, bloom and metals in the industrial section of the Toronto Exchange today. International Nickel moved up to a new high for recent years. Smelters gained two points. Waltery Common and Industrial Alcohol A each added fractions and Montreal Power holdings gained this afternoon.

Other gainers were golds in fair volumes were Brazilian, Ford "A", O.P.R., Fanny Farmer, Dominion Bridge and Steel.

The price tons reflected the bullish tendency of the New York market, but the interior listed issues particularly displaying strength.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Jan. 23 (CP)— The mining section was carried higher on the Toronto exchange today by some upswing in the big golds on the New York market. Gains up to 1-2 points were recorded by Dome, McIntyre, Lake Shore and Hollinger and in the miscellaneous group advances ranged up to 15 cents.

Expectation of early devaluation by the European gold block to be followed by a drastic depreciation of currencies with gold at a higher price was suggested as the stimulant to the buying of the gold stocks.

Base metals all did well on comparatively small turnover and in the afternoon Eldorado advanced about 13 cents on increased trading.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Jan. 23 (AP)—Stocks leaped into the advance today and prices were lifted fractions to 2 or more points over a broad front.

Conspicuous on the resumption of the upturn were the utilities, aircrafts, rails and industrial specialties.

Among the more active gainers were American Smelting, Howe Sound, Dome, U. S. Smelting, Cerro De Pasco, Douglas, United Aircraft, Penney, Montgomery, Nickel plated preferred, Southern Pacific, Columbian Carbon, General Electric, Westinghouse, Case, Kennecott and Anaconda. Most of the utilities motors and steels were slightly improved. The late tone was firm. Trades approximated 2,600,000 shares.

New York, Jan. 23 (CP)—Police sirens screeched and timid residents sought cover in the Garden City section of Brooklyn yesterday after bears—number unspecified—were reported prowling at large.

Then, as rifles were being prepared for action, John Lowe, a little fellow who works for a circus now in winter quarters arrived on the scene, armed with sack and rope.

He called "Spot" and "Ted," and, as they lumbered to his good bears should and docilely followed him back to their cage.

Hockey Magnates Against Changing Scoring System

If Any Change, Man Who Carries Puck Is Should Get Most Points

HOCKEY ..... by
New York, Jan. 23 (CP)—Agitation in the league to point scoring methods of the National Hockey League receives little sympathy from the guiding hands of the different league teams of the United States division.

The most recent suggestion for a point scoring novelation originated in Montreal and was made by a player around the N.H.L. circuit. It is not a new problem for the major league moguls to consider but as it came, however, from the heart of bigtime puck league it is deserving of consideration than when the idea emanated from Gotham and other cities.

A survey of managers, coaches and players who happened to be on the scene here yesterday revealed not the slightest favor for the plan. Under present rules when awarding of assists is left overdone but who is there to judge whether an assist is well earned or not?

More Uniformity Needed.

A little more uniformity by officials in the awarding of assists would go a long way in solving the problem. What I think it is coming to is a school conducted by the league to train referees, scorers and other officials so that there should be standardizing decision."

Lester Patrick, New York Rangers general manager and Mervin "Red" Dutton, head of the New York Americans, admitted there was room for when granting of assists seemed superfluous but both were afraid the idea of two points for a goal and one for an assist would complicate the host of "individualists" in the league. Dutton, he's players who would constantly deadlock for the top of the list over their own averages when a pass was in order.

Coughlin and his high-flying Bostonians entertained last night for Montreal Maroons on their own plains tonight. Holding second place in the league standings as a result of their Tuesday triumph over the Rangers here and winning games in Montreal and then the New Yorkers the Chicagoans seemed too happy to have any of the reported disturbances in their ranks.

Willie Marshall, a former Canadien now with the Hawks, seemed to sense the general feeling of the team when he said: "We're not going to spell town, the Hawks are some team, when I think it is going to happen."

"Yes," replied a reporter and everyone seemed satisfied except Coach Chem who warned, "the race is just beginning, wait 'till the games get tougher from now on, don't forget that."

Pile Sufferers

Ist You Answer These Questions?

Do you know the real cause of this is on the rectum?

Do you know they can be doctored from the inside?

Do you know you must get at and remove the cause of Piles, to get rid of them?

The real cause of piles is poor circulation—a congestion of the blood in the veins of the lower bowel. This makes the veins flappy, full of spurs—causing the blood and weak tissue, the rectal membrance.

So if you would have relief from piles you should use an internal medicine that will overcome this condition written by Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, HEMORRHOID bankbee pills by Leaving the cause, this relieves congestion, eases the pressure of blood in the veins of the lower bowel and helps to heal and restore the sore, tender parts.

HEM-ROID is so successful in the 10 days' treatment cases that Dr. S. McKeown or any other good druggist is authorized to make good our promise to you that if you are not completely satisfied with the results from one bottle, you may have your money back.

CURRENT SPORT
DAY BY DAY

W. J. "Penny" Mills, local member on the Ontario Athletic Commission, was in Toronto attending the first yearly meeting of the O.A.C. earlier in the week. Commissioner Mills states the O.A.C. showed a clean financial sheet for 1929, having wiped off a deficit left over from the track previous of some $11,500. This deficit was cleared up in the matter of about 18 months, Commissioner Mills pointed out. Incidentally another local citizen was at the head table board in the person of the Hon. Dr. J. A. Faulkner, chairman. The Commission will continue their annual campaign at Lake Couchiching as usual this season and has invited the Canadian Olympic committee to use the training facilities there before the team goes overseas. Other business was cleaned up and some financial matters granted. The sum of $500.00 was granted to the Ontario Secondary Schools of Ontario for the athletic activities in their local realm. A similar grant was made to the O.R.A. and the O.A.A.A. for the development of younger talent in those lines of athletics.

Basketball is fast gaining in popularity in these parts, especially throughout Ontario, as the game develops a style of speed and accuracy personified. For the past two seasons scoring cage games have developed wherever the Ex. C. "Cadets" met the local "Y" interlocutors in the cage sphere, but this season seeing overtime games being played at R.M.C. and also in Belleville, each playing a return and reverse fixture. Tonight Coach Lowry's local squad meets the first official appearance of the season in Belleville, when they meet the Y.M.C.A.-Y.W.C.A. squad in the Y.M.C.A.-Y.W.C.A. game at the Collegiate gym. The latter have presented a system of defence and wanted to play the game on the smaller "Y" floor but Coach Lowry and Coach Morden changed the venue of all games to the Collegiate this year, thereby giving his fast-travelling forwards a far better chance to display their wares and although the locals are trailing along in second place in the league standings, a win by a good or even decisive victory will elevate them to the position of undisputed possession and right on the heels of the group-leading Kingston "Y" team. The Belleville squad will be built around at the Collegiate tonight and new ones.

Irons have been in the fire for some time past to endeavour staging a post season 'little world series' between the locals and the winners of the International League Championship and the Ontario Hockey Association, Kansas City, St. Louis, Tulsa, et al. A set towards the appearance of a Belleville team of this was made yesterday, when permission was granted Coach Lowry by patrol of the Windsor Bulldogs, to recruit an all-star team from the I.H.L. for a post season series with the champions of the American Association. The Bulldogs meet the Oshawa O.H.A. fixture at the Arena. Then Coach Lowry will call on the Windsor Juvenile basketball game, and two other cage fixtures in the series are scheduled this week-end for Toronto C. I. visit Albert College for a game at the Arena tonight and Friday St. Mikes battle the B.C.I. and V.S. seniors at the Collegiate.

With Bill Cook as head man and practically the entire league got under way recently with 17 teams entered in the Senior, Intermediate and Juvenile and midget groups will be played at the Belleville Yacht Club. The Belleville Kiwanis Club has donated and paid for floodlights on the harbour rink the Belleville Yacht Club and Kiwanis Club are the sponsors and the skaters of ample lighting as the Yacht Club rink is considered one of the best on this side of their rink. Seventeen teams in all have entered hockey competition in the O. H. A. league this year. It is through the generosity of the Kiwanis Club and the three groups, that the constant demand for hockey players is supplied and the Kiwanis Club, the sponsors of the Kiwanis Club and the Y.M.C.A. are also commended upon for their good work in the Ki-Y league, year after year.

Owing to the lack of open dates at the Arena the Belleville Yacht Club, in the Bay of Quinte League, will be used for all home games. Early as yet, but expect to open hostilities against Picton next week.

Nearly 700 fans, students and adults alike, were on hand for the second double-header in the local Senior Interscholastic Hockey loop games at the Arena last night. This loop, with a local spirit and jammed full of pep and thrills, is gaining in popularity among the hockey lovers of the community. Last night's crowd was one of the largest seen in the local "ice palace" in quite some time, while the games presented the attendance, as both twelve-men squads fought. This senior school loop holds open house at the Arena every Wednesday night and provides more thrills than a three-ring circus. Short fieldgoals marked B.C.I. and Albert. B.C.I. tossle and added considerably to the color of the setting, and no doubt were seriously injured. A couple of the contestants stopped the hard-driven pucks with their faces which brought the fans to their feet cheering for battle. A slight change is noted in the league standing today as the previous league-leaders, St. Mikes, were toppled from their lofty perch, when they bowed to the B.C.I. 3 to 0. The Albert College and O.S.D. fray was fast, hard and packed a wallop.

Local O.H.A. fans watched with interest the results of last night's Petes to the tune of 6 to 1, which should make Friday night's game between the Oshawa team a real battle. Skipper Thomas' squad is working out every night this week in preparation for their big game with the Cherries on Friday. It will be the only appearance of the Motor City crew here this season, so tickets are going rapidly. Hurry along, boys.

In a friendly game of hockey the employees of the Quinte Hotel defeated the Bell Gang 4 to 2 on an eight-all tie at the Arena last night. Many thrills and drills were the order of the evening.

Heavy Adze Used in Killing Watchman

Montreal, Jan. 23—(CP)—A killer who left a trail of unsolved fire escapes of the Dominion Oilcloth and Linoleum Company and killed Raoul Verdon, 62, night watchman, with one blow of a heavy adze was the object of a city-wide search throughout Montreal today.

Verdon's body was found by a periodic calls on the electric alarm box-system, fellow employees in the basement of the factory and found him on the second floor, slumped against the side of a barrel with the blade of the axe-like tool sunk nearly two inches into his skull.

The pockets of the slain watchman had been turned out and police said robbery was the motive. The killer left empty handed, however, as the $300 Verdon was known to have was in a locked,

MENACE TO TITLE MUCH INCREASED

Champion Tony Canzoneri Had Hard Time Defeating Brescio Garcia

New York, Jan. 23—(AP)— Tony Canzoneri, the gentleman farmer from Marlboro, N.Y., and still the undisputed ruler of the lightweights but the menace of the tropic threat to his position seems to be increasing.

Ignacio Garcia, a courageous Mexican from San Antonio, Tex., earned respect as another "comer" from Madison Square Garden fans last night before he finally succumbed to the punches of Canzoneri, tuning up for a title defence in the spring, took on Carmelo Brescio, a 10-round non-title affair at the Star Casino. He won by a technical knockout in the ninth but only after a stiff battle.

Garcia's willingness to stand up and punch with the champion and his courage under severe punishment earned him the praise of the capacity crowd of 3,500 and place on the list of probable future challengers.

The fighters were over the lightweight limit, Canzoneri 137 and Garcia 137.

OSHAWA CHEVIES TO MEET LOCALS

Ed Thomas to Use Same Lineup That Defeated Peterboro

For their only local appearance of the season the heralded Oshawa "Chevies" will invade the Belleville Arena on Friday night at 8.30 to battle with the local "Redmen" in a regular scheduled intermediate O.H.A. game in the "A" class series. Through mutual arrangements between the clubs secretaries, Oshawa No. 1 the "Redmen" and the Motor City aggregation will meet on their home and home games with the Bellsville squad, while double headers are being entered in the games with the Peterboro sextette. This being the only appearance of the highly advertised Chevies who also perform in the Toronto Mercantile League, in the Belleville Arena, a capacity crowd is expected to be present. Manager Richmond states the elevated their hockey stocks considerably in the eyes of the local patrons with their clean-cut win over the Petes last week and against the champs of Peterboro the locals figure can be assured the patrons of the game.

The continued cold weather experienced locally of late has enabled the attendants at the Arena to provide lightning-fast ice, that should materially assist in providing good fast hockey for the game on Friday night when the "Cherries" boast of many clever hockey celebrities. Oshawa Motor City crew carry two goalkeepers in Glenn Salter and "Mac" McCuaig, their defence consists of two locally known puckisters in the persons of Doc Bowden and Doug Maumdrell, both of whom have previously thrilled local hockey audiences. Coach Harold Lake has "Squeak" Morrison and Ed Osler to work in as alternate rearguardmen, while his first line is composed of Ab Barnes, centre, flanked by Ofsboln and Cooper, two members of the noted Oshawa junior O.H.A. team coached by Charridge will take the pivot position on the second line along with Everett and "Winker" Smith, former Toronto junior. Collectively Coach Lake has a potent gang of rubber-chasers, many of whom have displayed their wares, with prolific results in Belleville on previous occasions.

On the other hand, however, the local "Redmen" have been practicing with regularity since their win over Peterboro as they realized full well, that the lack of condition was the telling ill that was. The "Redmen" have been out daily practicing and are in far better mettle than when Harry Oshawa hockey league always drew well in Belleville and with the class of hockey elevated to series "A" in the O.H.A. a capacity crowd is looked for at the Arena on Friday night. The locals will doubtlessly line-up as follows—Morton or Jeffery, defence, Harry Dargan or Earl McDonald; centre, Oy Farriage; wings, Carl and Pete Morgan, subs, Harry Gaucher, Bill Sargeant, St. Louis; Jim McGuire; "Stewie" McElrath and possibly Buster Whitton.

Seven Racing Champions Start In Rich Stake

(By O. Robert Kay)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)
New York, Jan. 23.— (AP) — Seven racing champions or would-be champs headed the probable starters in the $100,000 Hialeah Park handicap which will have its second running in California next year.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's Discovery, Handicap Champion of 1935 and holder of world records for mile and one-eighth miles (1:48 1-4) and mile and furlong (1:34 4-5), is the standout favorite.

Assigned to carry 126 pounds the mile and a quarter race, Discovery has carried 135 pounds over that distance in 1:54 3-5 to set the pace for other North American horse in handicap company.

Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane's Cavalcade, three-year-old champion of 1934, who defeated Discovery with regularity, appears fit enough after a year of retirement to give his great rival a real battle for the richest stake.

The only time Cavalcade was beaten at a mile and a quarter was when Discovery defeated Twenty Grand at the start of last year's auspicious campaign at Santa Anita. That was his last race.

Col. E. R. Bradley's Singar, winner of $198,400 in the inaugural running of the race, showed the form which earned him Horse of the Year honors by defeating Discovery in San Felipe handicap at Santa Anita last winter.

A. A. Baroni's Top Row, twice winner of Discovery last year, and when given big advantages in the weights, will carry 118 pounds in the Hialeah event. Top Row has been steadily improving with age. Top Row, fourth in last year's Derby, has also holds the world record of 1:42 for one and one-sixteenth miles.

Other nominees considered as having good chances to upset Discovery, each of them holding championships at some time, include Ladyman, second in the rich stake last year and 1932's two-year-old titleholder Singing Wood, best of the juveniles in 1933, and Twenty Grand, Champion money winning filly of 1934.

THESE FACTS ABOUT BRAN HAVE BEEN PROVED BY TESTS

Supplies Gently Acting "Bulk" to Aid Regular Habits

Now and then, in talking with young friends, the subject of bran has come up. So that real facts might replace unsupported opinions, the Kellogg Company has aided for some years research in leading nutrition laboratories.

Studies made on a group of healthy women showed that two tablespoonfuls of bran daily continued to relieve constipation* over a period of months. How different from cathartics—whose dosages often must be increased.

Another series of tests on men indicated that, with some people, the "bulk" in bran was much more effective than that found in fruits and vegetables.

Further tests showed that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provided vitamin B and iron as well as "bulk." This "bulk" absorbs moisture, and gently exercises and cleanses the system — the right way to correct constipation.

Serve ALL-BRAN regularly for regularity. Either as a cereal, with milk or cream, or in cooked dishes. It is a natural laxative food. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

*Constipation due to inadequate "bulk"

Board Room Gossip

As supplied by Sugarman and Crawford Limited, Investment Bankers

New York brokers interested in utility securities were naturally disappointed that they will have to wait at least another month for the much discussed TVA decision from the Supreme Court. A lot of brokerage business in the public utilities hinges on this decision. Brokers say that thousands of shares of stock, both in the "big" and "little" pool, dealers have in mind and above the market is waiting shares. There are those who aver that the psychology of the market for the immediate future trend will be allied to the decision in this case.

Financial and Chart Information Now Unfavorable

Outlook & Outlay, in their Special Bulletin today, say of the market:-

"The interpretation of market charts and tape behaviour is not up to date. Indeed it can not be called a science at all. It is probably just an art and therefore subject to error on the part of those who attempt it. With these shortcomings in mind, then, we are prepared to make some observations and to express our frank conclusions.

"The Dow-Jones Industrial Average made their 1936 high to date on January 16th. The Montreal Industrial Averages touched their 1936 high to date on January 18th. The Dow-Jones Averages have failed to pass their November 1935 highs despite continuation of relative strength in substantially speculative buying has predominated. Behind the broad movement has been letting the public have all the stock they would. Turnover levels. In brief "Distribution" has been taking place, or in other words stocks have been passing from strong hands to weak hands.

"The above picture is clear. Sufficient reason to withdraw from speculative positions and lean decidedly higher prices. From a short standpoint, moreover, it suggests the approach of an intermediate downward trend of more severity than the minor corrective movements which have taken place from time to time since last July.

"There is, therefore, no change in our recent advice to withdraw from New York stocks for the time being."

Financial Interest in Ontario

Financial interest at the moment is focused on the development of an A.A.A. substitute, progress of income legislation, and, of course, industrial news, which for the present is of a neutral nature. Some light was shed last week on the Administration's specific plans for providing little hope of even approximating a balanced budget.

Business is being encouraged enough, the market failed to react upon the President's reason for another burst of "inflation buying." Nevertheless, it is conceded by leading authorities that a position in selected equities should be held as a hedge against possible inflation scares. The outlook for business is therefore likewise favorable for a constructive longer term stock market policy.

Broadcasting Consider

While the market has developed some characteristics of uncertainty, the technical position is basically established remain predominant. Hence, although the possibility that uncertainty might develop into reaction should not be overlooked, a further broadening of conditions appears probable, remains the greater likelihood. Investors therefore should maintain their present investment positions.

The Financial World

Some hesitancy has been seen in the business picture following the turn of the year but indications are that the upward trend in trade and industrial activity will shortly be resumed. Any further clarifications of the political situation will be accepted to be followed by an acceleration of the revival of durable goods demand. One source of support for this contention is found in the fact that electric power industry is already producing near capacity and that industrial activity still below normal, and the result is that any material increase in power demand must be accompanied by substantial expansion in generating facilities.

Thus, while uncertainties may exist in the immediate outlook, the longer range prospect is such as to warrant a full retention of sound securities and acquisition of additional issues upon any appearance of favorable opportunities.

Markham Shareholders to Meet Today to Discuss Merger

Shareholders of Markham Mines will meet today to discuss and ratify the proposed merger with Buffalo Ankerite. It is anticipated that shareholders will approve the offer.

Noranda Mines

Ever since December 19th, when the 12½ per cent. dividend was in part, their support in the silver market with the result that the price of the white metal has now gone down a full 20 cents an ounce, the trend of all base metals has been downward. Copper has been affected but slightly, however, and although quotations are slightly lower than a month or two ago, the trend is firm. The statistical position has greatly improved in the recent past and the most conservative opinion is optimistic on the outlook.

Noranda is in the happy position of being a producer of gold and copper, and although part of their earnings fluctuate in direct relation to the price of copper, profits are not subject to the more or less violent fluctuations common with lead and zinc.

In usually conservative London metal circles a price of 10 cents a pound is predicted before the middle of the year, and the world is to enjoy further industrial recovery. It has been calculated that Noranda could earn over $8 cents per share per quarter with gold at $38.00 an ounce and copper 10 cents a pound.

Nickel Shares Weak

Although Wall Street has been showing signs of easiness lately, it has not been true of the Canadian markets. A very sharp set-back locally is not looked for at the present time. It is pointed out by those that American stocks have been advancing more or less consistently for a period of about ten months, while in Canada, the second started on its upward course only after the Federal election, on October 14th, last.

Consequently, while a technical reaction may develop in New York it is not warranted here. However, the declining tendency in Wall Street would have a damaging effect on Canadian stocks although this would only be of a temporary nature.

Broadcasting Consider

Those buying the mining securities are doing so with considerable confidence. The assurance has been officially given by the Federal Government that the mining industry can anticipate a satisfactory rate of stable taxation for the next five years and consequently will be able to go ahead with developments in a confident manner and without the ever overhanging uncertainty of steadily growing taxes. The Government feels, and justly so, that mining is one of the most important industries of the country and prosperity for those connected would go a long way to improving the conditions of the Dominion. Ottawa is willing to lend assistance to encourage mining development—a policy that has been found to be beneficial to the citizens as a whole.

The power stocks, particularly those operating in Quebec, were strong features yesterday. The market has not yet reflected the improvement experienced by the industry. In 1935, output of central electric stations in Canada amounted to 23.06 million k.w.h., an increase of 10 percent over 1934 and a new record high. There is no indication that the present industry anywhere essential to the community than are the public utility companies.

Broadcasting Power

Failing the purchase of power from Beauharnois by Ontario Hydro which at the moment appears unlikely, earnings of the company would not be sufficient to pay 5% per cent. interest requirements even before depreciation, according to estimates. This would force reorganization of the company as the possibility of selling power anywhere else at any price in the near future appears remote. There has been some talk of finding a market for power across the line but this is not taken seriously when the obstacles are taken into consideration. Would Canada be allowed to compete with United States power companies? It seems improbable.

One suggestion has been heard that if Beauharnois can find no market other than the Province Montreal Power which represents the present pulicy, a reorganization might be considered whereby first mortgage holders would get par for par in 5 per cent. and 2 per cent. bonds. In this plan their principal would be protected as they would be getting interest commensurate with earnings. Some provision might be made whereby the first mortgage bondholders could share in any future improvement when it transpires.

Nickel Gains in the Year

One of the outstanding examples of the use of nickel in the marine field is illustrated by the giant Normandie, which has been built with nickel-chromium steel turbines and blading in addition to frequent uses of the alloy in other sections.

During the year, a new bolting material, Monel shaft was forged for the stern paddle wheel of the steamship Sprague, now plying between Baton Rouge and Memphis on the Mississippi, and said to be the largest river steamboat in the world, according to Robert C. Stanley, president of the International Nickel Company of Canada.

Nickel cast iron is also finding applications in marine construction. One of these was the world's smallest outboard motor which develops 2.7 hp. at 4,000 revolutions per minute, though it weighs only 37 pounds.

Distillers-Seagrams Dull

Although Distillers-Seagrams did not enter the American market with its Crown Distillers Limited until some months after Repeal, it has swiftly established its products in the United States. Through experience and sagacious merchandising methods, the company has gained valuable good will among retailers and its prompt action in promptly giving consumers the full benefit of the tariff reduction, plus taxes, (The Government rebate)

Dale Plays The Game

BY

Ann Forester

Strong white teeth flashed in his cinnamon face.

"Remarkable perception in one so young! I never expected to agree with a woman again, but you move me to assent and unwilling admiration!"

But Dale was not to be drawn into conversation. In hostile silence she moved about the little shack, cutting bread, stacking cardboard plates, measuring coffee. Leaning on one elbow at the end of the counter, Brant Kendall watched her.

What an incongruous picture the girl made moving about the flimsy pine shack, thought the man lazily. A startling figure here in this desert town. The one colored dress she wore was so obviously fitted to a metropolis. In spite of the imported sleeves—perhaps because of them, he suspected it to be really an evening dress. The black satin slippers with their rhinestone buckles were the soberest of Dale's footgear, but they were far too ornate for the Waffle Kid's Kitchen. Like a gay but bewildered butterfly which had lost its way in the sagebrush, thought the man, and sneered at himself for his lapse into sentimentality. She was pretty, but a cheap little show girl taking a flyer in the drab respectability of a small town. A woodchuck thing to do—yet how appealingly pretty she was in spite of the rouge and the bleached hair!

When Sandy had returned and Brant had left, the girl asked questions about the mystifying outlaw.

"Brant—say, he's a bit different from these folks round here think!" from the loyal Waffle Kid. "But he's had some kinda hell, Brant has, an' it's taken the joy outa life for him. Yep—he's had some awful—hell!" Sandy screwed up one eye and acted mysterious to cover his lack of accurate knowledge. "I think Brant's just trying to kick off as hard as he can. That is—he don't drink so much because he likes to as because he's trying to end the whole thing. First off I tried to talk him into going out the way some of the hungers do. Hayti' in the place art an' letting rest and the good dry air do the trick. But he's got over all get out, Brant is. Don't want your pity an' don't want your medicine. Ain't too low down, of course. He's done for. Another man would have given up an' died years ago. But he's stubborn, Brant is—he's stubborn an' proud. Yep."

Dale found herself thinking of the man with irritated pity. A stubborn fool. Why hadn't he gone out in the desert while there was a chance of his being cured—

Passing the pool hall on her way back to the hotel that night, she heard his voice. Brant Kendall in a place—quiet, insolent saying something which brought a mighty roar of laughter from the other men. His collie was lying before the door and impudently Dale stepped over the dog.

"Poor old Major—" she whispered. "Good old dog."

Major acknowledged her homage with a roll of sad eyes and a grateful-ness that was his alone.

Brant Kendall raised himself again to an attitude of watchful waiting. Long, pointed ears fashioned on his dusky white paws.

Rhonda and man's angry voices woke Dale twice in the night, and when she reached the lunch stand the next morning Sandy's face was troubled.

"A hot time in town last night, believe me! Brant gets into an argument with two guys from Soda Springs. One thing leads to another, and they start a free-for-all. When the dust settles Brant's got a lamp as black as your hat and those Soda Springs guys is under the table. For, all he's so sick, he's got the strength of an ox, Brant is. Anyway, the sheriff takes a hand and they put Brant in the lock-up." Sandy worried facetiously. "That draughty jail isn't no place for him. He's a sick man! I'm goin' up an' tell him one!"

Sandy opened the cash register, scooped out the change and threw it jingling in his pocket. He pulled off his apron, rolled down his sleeves and, despite the heat, which was growing fierce as the morning waned, Sandy donned a coat from an old strand of mercy. Watching his brisk, decisive figure vanish up the street, Dale felt sympathetic tears sting her eyes.

CHAPTER 5.

THE QUEEN OF THE MAY

Half an hour later Sandy returned, weaving down the highway with the tall figure of Brant Kendall. There was a curious slump to Brant Kendall's body, as though some vital force which had kept him upright had been withdrawn. Every moment or so he would stop and cough, with hard, racking hacks which hurt the ear of the one who heard him. Dale checked an exclamation as the two men came into the lunch room; Brant Kendall's face was ashen, an ugly background for the swollen and livid eye—last night had been even more belligerent than Sandy knew —but a reckless jauntiness still clung to his manner.

He put aside the little man who supported him and made his way to the mirror on the wall to look examine his injury. He broke into a solemn chant, holding his head on the side to admire the discoloration.

"There's many a black, black eye, they say, but none so black as mine.....

There's a whistler-name and Mary and Kate and Caroline,

But none so rare as little Alice in all the land, they say—

"Sandy, man to man, have you ever seen a prettier shiner than that?"

"For I'm to be queen of the May, Mother, I'm to be queen of the May!

"And I was queen of the May, Sandy, the voting was u-ti-unanimous! I was elected without a struggle. And what a queen I was, Sandy! Oh, boy, what a queen I was!"

He caught sight of the big-eyed girl watching him over the counter and made a sweeping bow which nearly upset him.

"Miss Evans, I bid you Good Morning!"

Then deeply hurt by the cool stare of those brown eyes, "Sandy, tell the lady that little Alice won't bite. Dale, my dear,—— Even then he found time to be surprised that he knew her name. "Dale, my dear, it isn't polite to stare. A cat may look at a king. Dale, but nice girls don't stare at May Queens. ....For I'm to be queen of the May, Mother.... You don't mind if I call you Mother, Dale? And you may call me Little Alice—"

Brant's words were cut off by a fit of coughing which left him lying across the counter limp and white. Over his dusty head the troubled gaze of Sandy sought the girl's, and Sandy shook his head mournfully.

They laid Brant Kendall on the narrow cot in the rear room, and Sandy was very sober as he came back to the lunch counter.

"That draughty barn of a lock-up didn't do him no good last night! I'll bet we ain't heard all the bad news from his business yet!" he predicted darkly.

Two days after (this Dale sat alone in the early afternoon hunched over on a high stool, chin in hand, staring down the dusty white highway. Her heart was sore and very lonely. A month had passed since she impulsively left the show

TARZAN THE INVINCIBLE (Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

When Colt regained consciousness Le tried to raise him to his feet; and, with considerable difficulty, she succeeded in doing so. She put one of his arms across her shoulders, and guided him back along the trail, while Jad-bal-ja followed at their heels.

She had difficulty in getting him to the hidden glen where Jad-bal-ja's kill lay and her little fire was burning. When they came close to the fire, she lowered the man to the ground, while Jad-bal-ja turned once more to his feeding and his growling.

Colt, having eaten and drunk, once again fell contented and secure, even though in lay near a feeding lion.

That hard won assurance of Dale which had stood her in good stead through so many years had disappeared since she left the stage. Anger had given way to heartache. She waited in these unbecoming surroundings for the return of Brant Kendall in comparative silence. Men—what did they—what could they mean to her? All instincts—like Phil, who trumpeted to success over her loyal, loving heart. And of course there might be men who were different somewhere, she reminded herself wearily. Perhaps these same men would be different if she had the safe background of a home and parents. But she was alien, she reminded herself, as much an outcast as that derelict Brant Kendall.

As though he were summoned by her thoughts, Dale saw him now moving down the highway from the direction of town. Something graceful about that tall, shabby figure coming slowly through the brassy heat; something distinguished about the man, in spite of the ravages of illness and dissipation. He was in one of his black moods. The steel gray eyes were narrowed, his mouth had a bitter twist, and he was strange to say, entirely sober. He grunted a greeting and slumped down on one of the stools to stare down the empty highway even

"Sandy's away, isn't he? Good. I want to talk to you."

NAPANEE CINCHES GROUP TITLE BY BEATING TRENTON

Final Score is 5-4 With Trenton at One Time Taking Scores

ROY WILSON STARS

Scores Winning Goal And Hardest Man on Ice to Stop

Trenton, Jan. 23 (Special)—Roy Wilson, starry right winger of Walt Gerow's smart Napanee hockey aggregation, scored the winning goal in the last three minutes of play to defeat the Intermediate O.H.A. "B" four-game series between Trenton and Napanee, the score being 5-4, after the Trenton boys who were three goals down once through in the third period to score four goals which put them one ahead of Napanee.

In the first period both teams were very cautious and seemed to be feeling each other out, Kidd and Miller and Smith of the Whitballs did nothing both ends of the rink. Murphy was in the penalty box for holding. The Napanee line of Jackons and Lacey, who showed up so well in Napanee last Wednesday night were held in close check by the Whitballs' revamped second line of Davis, Johnson and Cain. After about fifteen minutes of the period had gone by the teams started to loosen up Wilson of Napanee and Kidd of Trenton making some brilliant rushes. The period ended with both teams skating up and down the ice, taking shots at each others' goal tender, when in position.

The second period from start to finish was filled with fireworks and had the crowd standing on their toes all the way through. Card of Napanee opened the scoring after T. Bentley carried the puck up to the Trenton defence line to slip a smooth pass over to him. Davis, Johnson and Cain turned the pressure on and had the Napanee team bewildered with their own end of the rink for five minutes.

An ardent discussion arose when T. Bentley of Napanee was sent to the penalty bench to fill the place of K. Watts, who had been in the penalty box serving time for holding. As a result K. Watts received another penalty of one minute. While Watts was out of Kidd, Smith and Miller rained shots in on Currie in the Napanee net, who seemed to handle them like a Rainsworth. Cain received a penalty for boarding and although the Napanee boys had a one-man advantage could get nowhere as Davis and Johnson back-checked the flash. Cain's penalty weakened the Trenton forwards, for almost as soon as Cain came back on the ice, Watts of Napanee scored their second goal of the game on a pass from Murphy to score their third goal. The period ended with the Whitballs all in on Currie.

Wen and Lost

The third period was one that will live in the Trenton and Napanee players' minds for a long time for in this period one saw a game won and lost in three minutes. The period opened with Whitballs playing four men up in an effort to equal or surpass the score, and their efforts were not all, for three minutes after the period got under way Johnson, tricky little left-winger of the Trenton team, went down the left board to white one past Currie, that he didn't even see. Miller of the Trenton boys came right back to score the Whitballs' second goal of the evening after getting Smith's rebound. Smith went right through the Napanee defence to chance at all by shooting a terrific ankle shot past him. With the score tied up the Trenton boys did not let up a bit and soon were one up on the Napanee squad. Johnson shot from the Napanee blue line. Whether or not Napanee were holding off nobody knows, but it appears that way for it seemed no effort at all for the line of Murphy, Card and Wilson to go through the Trenton team to even the count. Murphy scored the evener on a pass from Wilson. Napanee were out to win the game and played four man up until they got the winning goal. It came when Smith was put off for boarding. Wilson with three minutes left to play picked up the puck at centre ice, stickhandled his way down the right boards and at a point on the side of the net that caught the left hand corner. From then on till the final bell, Napanee kept the tiring Whitball forwards in their subjection. Lines that starred for Napanee were Murphy, Card, Wilson; Davis, Johnson and Miller stood out for Trenton.

Line-ups:

Napanee—Goal, G. Currie; defence, F. Bentley and T. Bentley; wings, R. Wilson and R. Card; centre, G. Murphy; alternate, C. Jackson. W. Jackson, D. Larry, K. Watts and H. Butcher (no goalie).

Trenton Whitballs — Goal, Grey; defence, R. Beck and R. Lott; wings, R. Smith and W. Miller; centre, J. Kidd; alternates, N. Johnson, K. Davis, T. Cain, J. Kerr and J. Gould (sub goalie).

Referee—N. Holway, Belleville.

CHEVIES DOWN PETERBORO 4-1

Oshawa Packs Too Much Speed For Liftlock Crew

OSHAWA, Jan. 23.—Oshawa defeated Peterboro 4 to 1 here Wednesday night in a senior O.H.A. Intermediate "A" game before a fair sized crowd of 2,000 fans. The Liftlock City crew put up a much closer struggle than the score indicated, penalties playing a major part in the game, Oshawa scoring their goals while Peterboro were serving theirs.

Fighting desperately to stay in the contention for the group championship, Peterboro, a city scrappy team, Oshawa pulling out of danger only in the last period.

Barnes gave Oshawa a big start early in the game when he took a pass from Art Pooley from close in after taking the puck from Chisholm. Bill Calladine tied the score late in the period during a parading attack which had both teams engaged in the play.

Percy Cooper broke the deadlock early in the second period on a pass from Chisholm. The period, which was very even, was enlivened by a short fistic encounter between Lex Chisholm and Meagor, which resulted in major penalties for both.

Cooper added another on a backhand after some fine stick-handling during a parading attack early in the last period while Wray was in the penalty box. Glad Claridge, who returned to the Oshawa team after a lengthy lay-off, scored Oshawa's last counter on a double pass from Everett and Smith. Odell, Calladine and Weir went to the penalty box in short order, but Jopling and Geddes played great hockey to hold Oshawa out while they were three men shy. Salter and Poley both turned in great performances, both making a number of nice saves.

Referee—Bert Hedges.

PORTABLE ORGAN SAVES THE SHOW

Substituted by Wife of Opera Producer When Orchestra Refuses to Play

Washington, Jan. 23 (AP)—An operatic cast with frazzled nerves finally reached the finale of Clement Deibes' masterpiece "Lakme" early Wednesday—and music history was written.

The producer, a doubt, the French composer's Oriental opera had been sung for the first time to the strains of a portable organ.

Fifteen hundred expectant music lovers, diplomats, society folk, legislators—filed into Constitution Hall last night for the National Opera Association's production.

The hour for the curtain-raising came but nothing happened. The orchestra insisted upon cash instead of the $1,500 cheque proferred for the two hours the argument raged while the audience waited. Mrs. Edouard Albion, wife of the producer, finally thought of the portable organ. The show went on.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"Shipmates Forever"

Filled With Thrills And Romance With Navy Background

Warner Bros. gave talking pictures to the screen. They also discovered that the United States Government and its various departments furnished the background for stories of human interest far exceeding fanciful adventures in mythological lands.

Now comes the story of Annapolis, in the Cosmopolitan production "Shipmates Forever", which has its local premiere at the Capitol Theatre today with Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler in the stellar roles.

This is a sweeping, panoramic film, packed with thrills, romance and infectious song. The life of the naval cadet is presented in all its vivid coloring. He is shown aboard the training ships, on the great battleships of the Pacific fleet at play and at work, as well as in love.

"Shipmates Forever" is the most romantic as well as the most thrilling of the service pictures.

Never has Powell been given such an opportunity to prove his versatility before the screen as in this picture. Not only does he sing many catchy airs in his inimitable manner, but his part calls for real dramatic action, to which he rises with genuine artistry.

The son of an admiral and Commandant at Annapolis, he has risen to the top as a cpoxswain in a New York Park Castelo and is known throughout the nation. Piqued by the scorn of his father, who tries to shame him into carrying out the traditions of the family, he enters Annapolis as a cadet, where he is unmercifully hazed because of his family relations, his crooning and his own haughty spirit.

It is not until his final year, when in training aboard a battleship, that he wins the love, respect and admiration of his shipmates by risking his life fighting through flame and scalding steam.

Dick is heard in three specially written songs for the production, one a rousing march time air, "Don't Give Up the Ship", that bids fair to become one of the popular hits of the season.

The special songs were written by the famous team of Warren and Dubin, but Dick sings other rollicking songs which caught and held the fancy of the audiences, one being the famous ballad, "Annual Abulbul Amir."

Ruby Keeler was never more winsome and charming than as the orphaned officer's daughter, who fights to keep Dick up to his metal as a student officer of the Navy and the traditions she loves. Miss Keeler also gives an exhibition of her dancing, which falls naturally into the plot, she meeting her living by dancing in a night club.

The majority of scenes were taken at Annapolis and aboard the U.S.S. Pennsylvania, flagship of the Pacific Fleet, in order to get the real atmosphere of the Navy.

There is a strong supporting cast headed by Lewis Stone who plays the role of Dick's father, an admiral and Commandant at Annapolis. His work is polished, sincere and talented. Others who give exceptional performances are Rosa Alexander, John Arledge, Hobart Cavanaugh, Richard (Dick) Foran, an upper classman; Joseph Sauers, Martha Merrill and Mary Treen.

Frank Borzage, who produced "Flirtation Walk", with Powell and Miss Keeler has given this picture exceptionally fine direction. The story and screen play were both written by Delmar Daves.

AT THE BELLE

"Stars Over Broadway"

First 1936 Musical Hit and Charles Dickens' "Scrooge" on Twin-Bill

"Stars Over Broadway", Warner Bros' new musical spectacle, opens a two days engagement at the Belle today, matinee daily, with an all star cast including Pat O'Brien, James Melton, Jane Froman, Jean Muir, Frank McHugh and Frank Fay.

There is a large variety of musical numbers, including new and catchy tunes by Harry Warren and Al Dubin, famous song writers, and selections from the compositions of Schubert, Verdi and Von Flotow.

Two beautiful and spectacular specialty numbers were created for the picture by two of the country's best known dance directors Busby Berkeley and Bobby Connolly.

Pat O'Brien and Jean Muir play opposite each other, and Miss Muir also sings for the first time in films.

Incidentally, in this picture the love affairs of Pat O'Brien and Miss Muir have a happy ending. Both stars have been noted for their unfortunate film romances.

This film introduces to the picture public two famous radio stars, James Melton and Jane Froman, who play their real life roles in the picture, that of radio entertainers. Frank McHugh plays the part of a song plugger. Others in the cast include William Blakewell, Marie Wilson, Frank Fay, E. E. Clive and Emile Conrad.

The story by Mildred Cram is a thrilling drama, interspersed with riotous laughs and carrying a glamourous romance.

Charles Dickens' "Scrooge"

The very soul of the great Charles Dickens seems to breathe through the film version of his famous Christmas tale "A Christmas Carol" announced as the second feature attraction on the same program under the title of "Scrooge".

In capturing the tender spirit long compelled Dickens to set down this immortal story, the screen has definitely achieved something approaching perfection. For this is authentic Dickens, as millions of readers have known him for two hundred years.

The story of the marble-hearted miser, Scrooge, is brought compellingly and with superb genius to the screen by Seymour Hicks, who has played the role more than 2,000 times on the English stage. He is in every detail and mannerism, the Scrooge we have known from childhood on.

It would be pure superorgation, in this report, to recount a story, that all the world knows, a story that unquestionably is the most famous Christmas tale ever written. Suffice to say that each character comes vividly to life on the film.

Performances start daily at 2.30, 7.10 and the last complete show commences at 8.35 p.m. "Stars Over Broadway" starts daily at 2.30, 7.10 and 9.30. "Scrooge" starts at 3.45 and 8.35 p.m. Here is a splendid varied program of screen entertainment that every member of the family will enjoy.

Edward Breaks Royal Convention

London, Jan. 23.—(AP)—King Edward VIII has broken a second royal convention by being the first British Sovereign to travel by railroad without employing the royal train.

While the nation was still surprised at the King travelling by airplane Tuesday, the first day of his reign, King Edward produced this second surprise.

Returning to Sandringham, His Majesty travelled in an ordinary first class compartment of yesterday afternoon's express, with a pile of newspapers to read on the journey.

Other passengers, waiting along the train corridor, were astonished to see their King with the Duke and Duchess of York and the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester following in this simple fashion.

SANCTION NATIONS WARNED BY ITALY DANGER IMPENDS

Mediterranean Security Pact Draws Roman Ultimatum

ITALY'S ASSURANCE

Spain Joins — Other Powers Contemplating Neutral Aid

Rome, Jan. 24 (AP)—Italy warned sanctioned nations of the world today that Great Britain's action in arranging a Mediterranean security pact constituted a "danger for European peace".

A memorandum prepared for General distribution to the sanctioned powers protested Great Britain had acted outside the League covenant in initiating the Mediterranean discussions.

The move, Italy contended, was made in the face of Italian assurances that she had no desire to expand a "colonial conflict" into a European war.

Italy had served warning at Geneva, two days ago, that she would withdraw her moral assistance pact between Great Britain, France, Turkey, Greece and Yugoslavia.

Spain Has Doubts

Geneva, Jan. 24 (CP)—Spain today aligned itself with the Mediterranean powers in pledging mutual assistance under the League of Nations covenant against any unprovoked Italian aggression.

"Spain will always honor its engagements," Salvador de Madariaga, the Madrid government's delegate to the League, informed August de Vasconcellos, chairman of the sanction committee in an official letter.

This meant that Spain, with Great Britain, France, Greece, Turkey and Yugoslavia now is pledged to give moral assistance should a conflict arise in the Mediterranean as a result of the League of Nations' policies against Italy's aggression in Ethiopia.

MEMBERS SHOUT 'VOTE, VOTE, VOTE' UPON BONUS BILL

President Previously Vetoed Bill For Immediate Payment

FINAL ACTION DELAYED

Senators Expected to Join Representatives And Carry Bill

Washington, Jan. 24 (AP)—President Roosevelt's veto of immediate payment of the bonus to United States war veterans was overriden today by the heavily-Democratic House of Representatives.

Members, barely awaited to hear the reading of the brief, handwritten veto message before demands of "vote, vote" were shouted on the floor.

Democratic leaders sought to delay the ballot until Monday but were voted down, 198 to 181.

The senate does not meet until Monday so final action was delayed over the week-end. Leaders there predicted the Senators would join the Representatives and make the $2,461,000,000 bill law over the President's opposition.

The President's Veto.

Immediate payment of the bonus was vetoed today by President Roosevelt.

Ending precedent of a quarter of a century, he sent a terse, handwritten message to the United States House of Representatives returning "without my approval" the $2,491,-000,000 bonus measure.

The sudden action faced almost certain overriding by Congress.

The only question in the minds of leaders was when the vote on overriding the veto should be taken. Speaker Byrns preferred waiting until Monday and the Democratic leader, Representative Bankhead, agreed.

Mr. Roosevelt, in his message, reiterated Senators and Representatives "especially those who have voted against what I said" in last year's veto of a currency-expansion bonus payment bill.

Benefactor of All Mankind Is Tribute Given Dentist Who Discovered Desensitizer

Spells Doom to Little Devils That Inhabit Every Dental Drill

DEADENS TOOTH

Refuses to Exercise Patent, Which Would Have Made Fortune

(By Sam Robertson, Canadian press Staff Writer).

New York, Jan. 24 (CP)— The mantis "benefactor of all mankind" is worn with easy grace today by Dr. Leroy E. Hartman, Canadian professor of dentistry famed for discovery of a desensitizer that spells doom to the 10,000 little devils who inhabit every dental drill.

Dr. Hartman, a native of Victoria, B.C., experimented for 20 years before bringing forth his simple and inexpensive pain-killer. An application deadens a decayed tooth to the point where the heaviest-handed dentist may do his worst with his most diabolic drill and the patient can still come up with a song.

The 43-year-old Canadian, now professor of dentistry at Columbia University here, might easily have made a fortune with his discovery. But he refused to exercise the patent held by the university.

"It is my contribution to humanity," he said. "I hope it will be the means of relieving much unnecessary suffering."

That he does not hope in vain is attested by the New York press, which bestowed the mantis the world headlines upon him. The newspapers are heavy with pictures of Hartman, the benefactor of a patient in a dentist's chair actually smiling.

Reporter Tries Experiment

The morning after Dr. Hartman made his formula public and announced he was giving it to the world "free of charge" an enterprising city editor drew up a reporter with a bit of bad teeth and an equal amount of courage and sent him off to experiment with Dr. Canadian's desensitizer.

In due course the formula—two parts sulphuric ether, one part absolute alcohol and one part chloroform—was mixed and one application of the green-murky concoction painted on the press-reporter's crumbling molar. The dentist then went to work with explorer and drill.

After cringing for a few awful moments, the now brave reporter confessed to a waiting world—full of dentist-ely humans:

"Not a semblance of pain."

The Hartman pain-killer, he said, converted the dread whirr of the drill into a merry hum, that sounded no more unlike "the Merry Widow Waltz."

Dr. Hartman lasted the following directions for use of the solution:

"This is a typical application. made on a moistened pellet of cotton, not saturated, and placed in dentine or caries. Allow pellet to remain in contact one minute for children, one and a half minutes for adults. Remove pellet and apply blast of warm air in area of application. Use rubber dam. If cotton rolls are used, varnish gums surrounding tooth and change cotton rolls immediately after application. One-half ounce sufficient for 200 applications."

COLD WAVE ON WANE IN STATES

More Than 100 Dead And Property Damage Most Extensive

Chicago, Jan. 24.—(AP)—Intense cold which paralyzed the upper half of the United States began to wane today, but it still claimed almost 100 dead and widespread property damage, today apparently headed for the climatic ocean's moderating temperatures with more snow were forecast generally.

However, subzero frigidity still held many North Central and mid-Western States in its icy grip as warmer weather was predicted for Minnesota, Wisconsin, Missouri, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars in property damage was caused by fires. Three villages in Upper New York virtually were burned out by flames carried by high winds. Small fires in Ohio caused an estimated $250,000 loss. Two buildings in downtown Pittsburgh were destroyed with a loss of $100,000.

International Falls on the Minnesota Canadian Border again turned in the record low temperature for the United States yesterday with a minus 55 degrees.

At Newark, Ohio, 40 relief workers, going through drifts of miles of snowdrifts to rescue five fellow workers and five teams trapped for two days.

Many rural schools throughout the storm-swept area remained closed today. Railroads and airlines were making valiant but pathetic efforts to sign up trains to the extent that would place the affairs of the country in the hands of a Council of State, be turned to those present and applied quietly and simply: "I am sorry to keep you waiting like this."

Sir John added: "These were the last words we heard from him, though he gave us each the smiling nod with which he was accustomed to end an audience."

CIVIC SERVICE HELD ON TUESDAY AT 11 O'CLOCK

Collegiate Auditorium Scene of Public Memorial

GOVT. RECONSIDERS

Belleville's civic memorial service for the late King George V will be held on Tuesday next, January 28, the day of the royal funeral at London and Windsor, it was announced today. The service will take place in the auditorium of the Belleville Collegiate. The Ministerial Association members are drawing up the order of service.

Ottawa, Jan. 24 (CP)—Scheduled to meet at 3:30 this afternoon cabinet will, it is understood, reconsider the question of whether or not next Tuesday should be a day of national mourning.

A proclamation has declared Tuesday, the day of the late King George's funeral, a public holiday. Since that proclamation King Edward VIII has expressed the wish there be as little interruption in the normal course of business as possible.

It is considered probable a new proclamation will issue following today's cabinet meeting morning that of Wednesday. Sittings of cabinet, however, continue for several hours, and the government announcement may not come until tonight.

The government will, it is expected, indicate the nature of the participation it considers desirable for the Canadian people to follow in donning the black and grey.

Religious services will doubtless be held and a two minute silence observed.

King's Last Words To Councillors

London, Jan. 24—(CP Cable)—"I am sorry to keep you waiting like this."

These were the last words King George V spoke to his councillors.

Sir John Simon, Home Secretary, revealed today that Privy Councillors in the fateful meeting of the Privy Council before the King died, were kept waiting while he was making valiant but pathetic efforts to sign his name to the state papers which would

Arrangements Completed For Royal Funeral on Tuesday

CORTEGE IN LONDON

Royal Funeral Train Will Reach Windsor at 12.15 (Greenwich Time)

London, Jan. 24 (CP)—Arrangements are practically completed for the funeral Tuesday of King George V. The body is now lying in state in Westminster Hall and before Tuesday morning will be viewed by probably 1,000,000 people.

But Tuesday morning the coffin will be taken from the black and gold catafalque in the historic hall and returned to Windsor in a formal procession.

Scenes At Windsor.

The royal train will arrive at Windsor at 12:15. There the coffin will be placed on a gun carriage to be drawn by bluejackets to St. George's Chapel. King Edward VIII will immediately behind the coffin, followed by the royal princes and foreign monarchs.

Then will follow several landaus bearing the Queen Mother, the Princess Royal, the Royal Duchesses, and foreign royal ladies.

Detachments of the army, navy and air force will march behind the royal mourners. Foreign troops will participate in the funeral, more than 1,000 footguards lining the mile-and-one-half route.

King's Favorite Hymn.

In St. George's Chapel, historic edifice of Gothic construction that Queen Victoria had restored, the actual funeral service will be simple. It will include the King's favorite hymn, "Abide With Me". The Dean of Windsor will read the lesson. The archbishop of Canterbury will read the service, assisted by the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Winchester.

Burial will be in the tomb section immediately beneath the chapel.

Thousands Pass Catafalque.

London, Jan. 24 (AP)—The first of 1,000,000 sorrowing pilgrims filed today past the bier of the late King George V on a black catafalque, approached on purple-carpeted steps, in the ancient Palace of Westminster.

There, the new King Edward VIII and the bereaved Royal Family left their liege for four days of public homage that will be marked with a royal burial next Tuesday at Windsor.

As Big Ben boomed 9 a.m. (3 a.m. E.S.T.) the nation's pilgrimage began. When the famous clock strikes 9 p.m. Tuesday, London hopes to have passed 1,000,000 of the dead sovereign's subjects—men, women and children alike—will have joined in this last act of tribute.

Crowds Lose Sleep.

Long before last midnight, crowds of the vast metropolis filled Westminster Hall, sacrificing their sleep for a chance to pay their last tribute to the first to pay tribute to their late King. Huddled in mufflers and heavy coats, they kept a vigil throughout the night against the bitter cold. Police, on duty, were also house parliament. When a rain-washed dawn broke over the city of London the queue stretched nearly a mile.

Through the quiet south window of Westminster Hall, the crowds could see the bier, with its four flickering candles where the dead monarch lay, alone with his guards.

Guards said it was a sight they'll always remember.

The flag-draped catafalque, bearing the royal coffin, formed an island of light amid the shadowy spaces of the ancient hall which the late King loved as the "heart of our mighty empire."

He spoke those words on May 9 when he received the congratulations of parliament on his silver jubilee—the last time he was at this spot alive.

At each of the four corners of the catafalque stood a guard, his head bowed, his arms reversed from the stood four yeomen. One of the latter, exhausted by the ordeal, collapsed and was carried from the hall. Without a word, another took his place.

In Lines Four Abreast.

When the great crowd of pilgrims at last moved into the building, it was shepherded through wooden lines, four abreast, that were placed along both sides of the coffin.

Many, overcome by cold and awe, they flowed by throughout the day at an estimated rate of 18,000 persons an hour.

Many countrytolk, bewildered by the whirling traffic of Metropolitan London, joined the throng.

"I wanted to make certain of seeing my king once more," said one old man who had travelled all night.

At 1 p.m., more than 40,000 persons had filed past the catafalque.

It was announced King Edward had ordered the train that bore him should not be drawn in the houses along the route of the funeral cortege next Tuesday.

King Haakon of Norway and Crown Mand, the sister of the late King George, arrived after an overnight trip from Oslo and went at once to Buckingham Palace.

ABATING WINDS NEXT 24 HOURS

The Hamilton area was, perhaps, the best off of any district in the province. Temperatures hovered around the zero mark but winds were dying and gangs of men made short headway in clearing highways and streets.

Trains and several sections of Lambton County, particularly around Petrolia, were blocked by drifts and that motorists have not been able to move on them for the past three days. The storm is still raging today. Trains were running on time, however, carrying much of the traffic. Hotels were filled with stranded travelers while their cars and coaches used their journeys' by rail.

Highways in the county roads were blocked to motor traffic about Kitchener. Brockville was pretty well tied up by the storm this morning. Roads were all open to traffic but there was only a moderate overnight snowfall. The temperature was below zero.

Many Cars Abandoned

Highway leading to Port Arthur were closed today and Aberdeen motor cars dotted Cavelier Hill between Green Bridge and Port Colborne.

Sault Ste Marie's thermometer dropped to 16 degrees below zero overnight. The wind reached 70 miles an hour in the height of the blizzard.

The fault reported a string of low temperatures that included 44 below at Hawk Junction, 42 below at Hawk Station. Heaps was 40 below zero, Michipicoten 36 below and Fort Osa 34 below.

Highways and many side roads were blocked by the heavy drifting and in the Brantford area. Vehicular traffic was slowed up but Waterloo county.

DECAY OF TREES DISCUSSED AS CHAMBER MEETS

Improper Trimming is Chief Cause States Arthur Gillis

REPLACE TREES

That the shade trees in Belleville should be protected from improper trimming which will ovenbually result in their premature decay and destruction was the unanimous opinion of the directors of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce at their regular weekly meeting on Thursday and it was decided to bring matter to the attention of the city council with the request that consideration be given to the matter and means adopted to prevent the destruction of many of the beautiful trees in the city. It was the opinion also of the directors that proper trees should be set out in places from which have died and also, that new trees should be placed along streets which are now unshaded at the present time.

The destruction of trees through improper trimming was brought to the attention of the directors by Mr. Arthur A. Gillis, a member of the Agricultural Committee of the Belleville Chamber who was the guest at the meeting. Mr. Gillis pointed out to the directors that painting of the wounds caused by the trimming of the trees would not preserve them from decay for any length of time and that a more scientific and effective treatment could be obtained and is now being used in many cities.

The question arose in connection with the course arranged under the auspices of the Chamber and which opens this week evening and was reported to have been most interesting and enjoyable, the attendance at the lecture also was reported as being satisfactory. Arrangements are complete for the Get-Together Banquet of the members of the Council, the City Council and the Chamber of Commerce, which will be held next week when it is hoped to see a large complement of a committee to select the standing committees of the Chamber was left in the care of the President, Mr. R. F. Bernstein, Mr. Ken Macdonald and Mr. C. Sherlfy. Several directors and members of the Chamber attended the annual convention of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which will be held at Toronto on the 4th, 5th and 6th.

Those present at the meeting were Mr. F. F. Bernstein, president and the following directors: Messrs J. H. Dayfoot, W. G. Sprague, C. O. Herman; Mackenzie Robertson; H. E. Fairfield, W. H. Morris, and A. McIntosh; Leo B. Riggs and secretary-manager J. O. Herity.

CRIPPLED MAN ASKS JAIL TERM

George Chase, 63, is Given Two Months Instead of Three Months

An elderly gentleman giving his name as George Chase and his age as 63, who claimed he had no home and no money, and who apparently appeared in local police court this morning and asked Magistrate Ponton to send him to jail for three months, where he would be assured of three meals and a warm place to sleep.

"I don't see why the county should have to pay for this expense, where does this man come from?" asked Arthur A. Gillis, K.C., of Brannan, K.C. Upon being informed that Mr. Chase, a one-legged man, had been a resident locally for some time and was also a charity resident in the city, the case was cancelled in his request, but only meted out a two months' sentence.

Constable Jas. Belleville, pleaded guilty to a charge of the theft of a fur coat, the property of M. E. Reid and was given one month in the common jail. Constable Belleville read the accused man's lengthy criminal record to the magistrate, the latter for those appearing for the accused, pointed out that the theft charge was not one robbery had received clemency and was only given 15 days. Asked if he had anything to say, the accused had a job to go to if leniency was shown. Mr. Ponton refused to recommend relating to the seriousness of his ways and concluded by heading to him a sentence of three months meted out the 30 day term.

A case involving a local business man of illegally operating punch boards was dismissed for the defendant, when it was shown the boards returned to their previous owner. The case was brought before the Attorney Generals Department at Toronto, but have received no reply to the order to discontinue the procedure," added Mr. Donnan. The punch boards were seized over six weeks ago.

Two teen aged girls appeared for sentence, charged with larceny and were found guilty of vagrancy after information sentence consisting of three months with a further indeterminate sentence of two years less a day or committal to Mercer Reformatory for Women's Penal Institution in Toronto was imposed.

A number of P.C.V.A. cases laid under the Highway Traffic Act, were laid by Patrolmen Delaney and Irvine. All cases in the P. C. V. A. were either dismissed or taken over, due to the rather slow communications from the Government pertaining to public conveyances. A charge of reckless driving was withdrawn against a Deseronto man at the request of Mr. Donnan. "We have not sufficient evidence to proceed in this case" stated Mr. Donnan and His Worship immediately withdrew the charge. A few charges of delinquent motorists not displaying the proper lights after sundown brought the minimum fine. Today's local court lasted well over an hour but all cases were speedily disposed of, however.

Edward Lowe, 32, Sentenced Here

Edward Lowe, 32, of Belleville, was sentenced to serve not less than three months nor more than six, or pay a fine one day in the Ontario Reformatory by Magistrate Ponton Shuter, K.C., in today's police court. Lowe pleaded guilty to breaking and entering the premises of Hinkin's grocery, Front Street, Tuesday night last. It was shown, Lowe had a previous crime record and had only recently been liberated from jail after serving a two months sentence for theft.

Then into the young man who stole Lawyer Ormond Butler's scarf and it is found on his person as he was being admitted to jail on Wednesday," jokingly asked Crown Attorney Donnan.

It was Detective Isaid who, the other day, when taking Lowe up on remand recovered for Mr. Ormond Butler his lost scarf.

"I guess that does not enter into this case, however, as the scarf had been returned," added Magistrate Butler, as he lowered his head to cover a smile.

SNOW BLOCKS MANY SIDE-ROADS

Farmers Forced to Wading Through Deep Drifts, Traffic Stops

Snowbound farmers in the district were battling drifts, while motorists today, are battling "taste" way to Belleville, with many stores, business today, and traffic on the concession roads past the limits of the Third Line, Sidney, Northwestern of Sidney and Thurlow Townships, was being tested on the 10th most part as long as travellers confined themselves to the horse and sleigh as a medium of travel, it was reported today. The car, except on the highways, the roads of the southern part was distinctly out.

Roads in North Hastings, however, were still blocked by the billows of snow that in some parts reached the height of the fence. Travellers awaiting in the city before venturing into the northern parts of the county were eager for reports of the county road superintendent, Simeon Fox, today, that large gangs or men were being rushed into the work of grading and clearing, and roads were being opened in all directions.

Nine Hours' Journey

According to one motorist T. E. Pritchard of the Canada Packers, nine hours' time was needed to complete the trip from Tamworth to Marmora, following Wednesday's snowfall and drifting. On other occasions the trip has been made in two hours.

Reports also to reports, the road between Ormsby and Murphy's Corners was in the worst shape of state. Reports also indicated that the Belleville stage had been snowbound during the previous night and had been forced to return while the Consolidated Bus Lines plows are operating in the Millbridge area.

Marmora and Madoc bus drivers reported that the bus lines will enjoy schedule trips were being maintained. According to Stapley's Garage, Madoc, the night mail was being made by Stirling and Marmora.

Although class rooms in rural schools have been closed all week, in the past several days of bitterly cold and drifting, little hardship has been reported. Only a few cases of snow bound pupils have been reported. Most of the rural sections are open as usual, it was stated by School Inspector H. A. Allen.

North of Shannonville and throughout the Tweed concessions of Tyendinaga; north of Camilton and Hungerford, Thurlow and Thurlow, King Winter has set his seal and there was not sight intended today except with the trusty team or single horse and cutter, reports from these sections indicate. Actual cases of farm houses being snowbound were few and far between questioned.

At the home of Mr. W. J. Taylor, on the Concession of Thurlow it was reported that along that Concession road there is a deep drift in favor of the cutter and are on the highway and are employed by Walter Hall Coulson. A second store closed after the summer season.

Supplies were running low and at the first of this week trucks were sent for fresh stores of groceries but have been unable to reach the village. Drifts and sewer feet deep have sealed up highways from Port Franks to Thedford, 9 miles away.

There was no bread in the village this morning and housewives had only scanty stores on their pantry shelves with which to feed their families. In the only store in Port Franks there remained only a small amount of tin goods.

Port Franks' only snow plow was called into play in the hope a road "outside" might be opened but the machine broke down, lacking the heavy drifts. Townspeople were resigned.

Port Franks, 60 Inhabitants Shut Off From Supplies by Loop Drifts

Port Franks, Ont., Jan. 24 (CP)—Huge snowdrifts have isolated this tiny Western Ontario village on Lake Huron, north of Sarnia, and today the threat of hunger and starvation hung over its 60 inhabitants.

Tweed and District

TWEED—The 4th annual meeting of the congregation of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was held in the basement of the church on Friday evening. The meeting was opened by prayer by the Rev. W. A. Hunter, B.A., B.D., after which Mr. J. H. L. Rollins was chosen as chairman.

In a few fitting words, Mr. Rollins spoke of the object of the annual meeting to summarize to the people the progress during the year both financially and spiritually. The reports of the different departments of the church work showed encouraging progress in each one. The annual thankoffering was the largest for many years back.

The report of the session spoke of the loss during the past year of two members of the congregation, Mrs. (Dr.) Mather and Mrs. Catherine Davis. It was drawn to the attention of the meeting that Mrs. Mather had been one of the oldest and most faithful members of the congregation and had been largely instrumental in raising the funds at the time of the building of St. Andrew's. Mrs. Davis was also one of the older members and during her residence on Tweed was one of the most faithful members who left behind her a remembered vow to church in a most fitting way.

The past year was considered one of the most successful in the history of the church. After the business of the evening was disposed of, lunch was served and a social hour was spent that was greatly enjoyed by all.

PLAINFIELD

Plainfield.— Taking as his text, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son" (St. John 3), Rev. H. McAmmond, returned missionary, from West China speaking in the United Church here on Sunday evening held a soldiers' of Christ. He said that the Christian spell bound for over an hour while with wonderful enthusiasm and dramatic skill he described conditions in China today compared with what they were over thirty years ago when he first began work in that land. Mr. McAmmond returned to Canada last August and previous to that he and Mrs. McAmmond with the help of a few native workers were responsible for giving religious leadership to some 2,000,000 Chinese. The speaker stated "the best contains no intimation of colour, race or nationality. God loves all peoples and Jesus died for all. In China there is no overlapping. China is important because one quarter of the population of the world is in that land. Over 75 per cent or the people have had no chance for enlightenment or of securing an education." We may feel that many of the Chinese who have come to this country are bad, but said Mr. McAmmond we have no business taking other foreigners in China who are a match for the worst foreigner we have in Canada. When once the young men of China became aware that the pig tail was a symbol of servitude to the Manchurians it was no longer tolerated. Young girls came to see with what freedom the Canadian women walked and how a natural foot added to their gracefulness so they would no longer allow their feet to be bound. Older Chinese women today are ashamed of the fact that their feet were bound and would scarcely dare discuss too large to hide the fact. Similarly Mr. McAmmond outlined the progress in business and the civic organization created. He left no doubt as to what Christianity has done for women and girls and of the part the church work being carried on in the interests of children and the part of the large numbers who are being influenced.

The listeners were convinced of two things that the life of the missionary is a very strenuous and sacrificing one and that the money given to Christian missions is a genuine and worthwhile investment.

After the service the members of the congregation were given the opportunity of viewing a number of pictures taken recently of the school scholars, the mothers and babies and members of the staff. Mrs. McAmmond have done such a fine piece of work. Also Chinese bills and silver.

Mr. McAmmond was entertained by the United Church personage over the week end by Mr. and Mrs. Everson.

The story of "The Good Samaritan" was told by Margaret Carlton. Miss Hamilton sang. Mrs. Stanley Hazard read a story. The lodge prepared by Mrs. Arthur Hall on "The Church and Unemployment" was given by Mrs. Jack Green.

GREATNESS OF SIMPLICITY

Simplicity and greatness go hand in hand. The last few days have brought many times over to the thoughts of man one who was sovereign of a greater part of earth than ever fell away to any king or emperor, and was used to affairs of the gravest import of international and international nature could be simplicity itself in his life. The setting of Sandringham House and the estate, the village church where He late Majesty used to worship, the placing of the body in a casket made of an oak tree cut in the royal forest, a true English oak, the simple scenes at the church where foresters and farmers of the royal estate kept guard in bodies of four during the night and where two little girls placed a cluster of heliotrope, the favorite flower of the King, on his coffin as it rested before the chancel of the small church, the scene of the Queen Mother going twice to the little sanctuary to be with the body of her royal husband, the visits of the royal family, the filing past of the rural folk, some crippled being led by the casket—they was none of "the pomp of power," but that simplicity which has endeared the Royal House of Windsor to the British people. It was a tribute to a man, whom the royal family knew as husband and father and the people knew as "the squire."

THE ROYAL EDWARDS

The name Edward is one of the favorite names in Anglo-Saxon times, the London Advertiser points out, mentioning the names of the Confessor, the Elder, the Martyr and Edward the Confessor, in the era before the conquest by the Norman Duke, William who became William the First. One of the greatest of the English Kings who really welded England and Wales was the first Edward, who lived from 1239 to 1307. He was one of England's great soldiers, and in the middle dingy days of crusades and wars. He conquered the town of Nazareth in a crusade to the Holy Land. He conquered Wales and on several occasions invaded Scotland, the last of which invasions he lost his life. Those were the days of Wallace and Bruce so nobly and stirringly sung by Burns in "Scots Wha Hae" in which the memorable lines appear "See approach proud Edward's power, Chains and Slavery". Today the great Bruce and Wallace are remembered in the songs of the Border and loved as heroes by all British peoples, while Edward though he went far to build up Britain has not won a place in story and song except as enemy of Welsh and Scot. But he left one thing to the world, the office of Prince of Wales, and made his own son Edward the first Prince, thereby helping to tie that warlike and freedom-loving land to the throne. The first Edward gave the first properly constituted parliament and allowed the people the right to fix their own taxation. He was a great statesman.

The last Edward was the son Edward the Second the better, a careless weakling who died the victim of a conspiracy at the age of 43 after twenty years of misrule. Then came the third Edward who in many ways resembled his grandfather the first Edward in ability and bravery. He took land from Scotland and won cities in France. His song "Edward the Third" made his name in war. The Prince's health failed and Edward Third died leaving the land better than before he came to the throne, though he had lost most of his French conquests.

The fourth Edward did not come on the scene until the middle of the fifteenth century in the troublous last days of the kingship of Henry Sixth. The French possessions had been lost. Edward figured in the Wars of the Roses, was a favorite of the people, but no real contribution to the development of England is credited to him. He reigned 22 years, 1461-1483. This Edward's son, Edward the Fifth, was only thirteen and history credits his uncle Richard with being his murderer and the uncle who made terror rampant through the land. The little King and his brother were cherished by Shakespeare in the people's heart forever. Fate at last caught up and reckoned by the hands of that seemingly modern-typed criminal who delighted in making men and women and children suffer, Richard the Third.

Edward the Sixth was another young King, the son of King Henry Eighth, and Jane Seymour. Edward died at the age of sixteen, having been dominated by leading nobles in his court. He had had no opportunity to rule.

Edward Seventh is still well remembered. He ruled for 9 years after the South African campaign and before the Great War. He had served an apprenticeship of sixty years before he assumed the royal purple at the death of his mother, Queen Victoria. He was popular with all the courts of Europe and his own people, was dignified, and wise. His age is said to have been one of the happiest periods which come now and then in history.

Edward the Eighth is one of the most popular figures in the world, he is known to every race and clime, he is the friend of poor and peasant, he is modern in his tastes and his outlook, he is an exponent of the strenuous life. He has had years of training under a wise father and promises to follow in the path of devotion which has made the name of King George revered throughout the world. Hopes are bright with Edward on the throne. He is still a young man with his group of affairs may be depended upon to reign with a distinction which will give British history another brilliant story of achievement and contribution to the welfare of mankind.

STORMBOUND

Some stormy night when winter winds are blowing,
When drifting snow dims every window pane,
I shall pretend that I am once more mortal
I shall come back to my own hearth again.

And I shall see the birch logs burning brightly
And set my chair where it was wont to stay;
I shall find utter peace in earthly shelter
And think it strange that I have been away.

The leaping flames will sense that I am stormbound,
The wind may tell me of its unessed pain;
But I shall rest before the ruddy embers,
Dreaming of swallows and of warm gray rain.

And do you think, my dear, that you could join me?
You are so lovely in the firelight's glow.
Perhaps we could re-live that heavenly rapture
We felt when we were mortals long ago.

Montreal —K. A. Mackinnon

WEDNESDAY NIGHT AND THURSDAY produced a real old-fashioned Canadian storm with blizzards and a wind with that cut like a knife. Country roads were blocked by the snow which piled up in great drifts, whipped by the strong wind, and automobile traffic just stopped completely in most rural areas. Just one instance illustrates the severity of the storm. Scene Front Street barbershop—man in the chair, shivering his head during the hirsute artist. Enter a Chinese business man, who asked if a man from Madoc was there. Yes, said the man in the chair. How is it he used to Madoc asked the Chinese man. Impassably said the man in the chair. Well said the Chinaman, I have been in Belleville since Tuesday and tried to get back to Madoc Wednesday evening but couldn't make it. It's worse now, said the man in the chair. I came in on my way to attend a funeral of a relative in Brighton, but I'm doubtful if I'll make it. Thinks I'll wait to be the main right here in Belleville until the roads are opened up. Reports from various parts of Canada and the United States relate cold low temperatures with snow. Wednesday evening the mercury dropped from thirty above zero to three below on Brooklyn Bridge, and 60,000 men were trying to dig their way out of the snowdrifts, an appropriation of one million dollars having been made by the corporation for that purpose. It is estimated that a week's work is required to dig Manhattan out of the snow bank. International Falls, up Kenora way in Wisconsin reported fifty-five below zero and other low records were reported from various parts of Canada and the United States, indicating that Miss Columbia is trying to steal the white glory of Kipling's 'Our Lady of the Snows.'

RADIO BROADCASTERS HAVE BEEN EMBARRASSED by the withdrawal from legal use on the radio of some thousands of musical selections, the copyright for which is said to be held by a New York Company. Toronto Globe sums up the situation briefly as follows:

The Canada Copyright restrictions can affect Guy Lombardo's theme song "Auld Lang Syne". It is the oldest song used on the radio today as an air signature, and it has served Lombardo for six years. The lyrics are written more than 125 years ago. And while we're on the subject we must say that this Warner Brothers restriction on radio music is causing complications. Several radio stations have cancelled broadcasts of parades, fearing some brass band would pop up with a Warner tune while passing the microphone. You never can tell when or how trouble may start. NBC is at present defending a suit started some months ago by Boston's Pennsylvania. During one of his Saturday programs Al Jolson made some derogatory remarks about the service there, and the hotel is suing the network for $100,000 damages."

LOOKING BACKWARD

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 YEARS AGO

Jan. 24th, 1916.

A great deal of interest has been aroused in local circles over the performance of Bobby Kerr, the former Shannonville horse, who beat the world's best record in Toronto a short time ago, and Darapring owned by W. Pearts of Belleville, who in turn beat that record in Montreal recently. There will be more in Toronto and each won two heats and the race was called off until the following day, Paddy R. winning out. They are expected to meet again in Ottawa during the coming week and an exciting race is anticipated. Both horses have their supporters, but Darapring is generally conceded to be the better horse. This may prove to be only loyalty to a local horse: time will tell.

50 Years Ago

Jan. 24th., 1886.

The Moira river is even with its banks near the mouth. Today water penetrated to places never before reached by the present flood. At 12 o'clock last night there was not much change in the situation, but this morning many people living on James St. and Colborne Street who slept on the ground floor of their houses were awakened on hearing their beds to find themselves up in their knees in water. The whole portion of Murney West south of Rock Street is under, at least, two feet of water; in many places it is much deeper. Dwellings south of the street named are flooded, the water being almost up to the windows. Rock Street is suffering from want of protection from the river, and soon today the water was still rising and had reached the yard of Mr. Vandervoort on James Street in the rear of Clark & Vermilyea's grocery. A rise of 18 inches will flood the lower floor. On Everett Street the water has backed up through the drains and flooded the street north of Bridge Street. Along Front Street the cellars are inundated. The water was several feet deep in Mr. H. Reid's cellar and came over the tops of rubber boots in the carpet room in Brigadi and Thompson's store on the west side of Front Street. The basement of the Ritchie Store is flooded and the yards are several inches of water which cuts off communication with the foot bridge. The ice in the river is even with the banks from the foot bridge to below the lower bridge where it overflowed on the west side. The sahwy is surrounded with water and the water reaches as far north as the Gems for the Friendless. Many furnaces have been extinguished by the water.

LOOK OUT FOR THE "COMMON COLD"!

These Are the Dangerous Days When Colds Are Easiest to Catch!

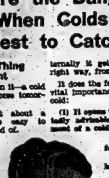
The Sensible Thing in Treatment

How often have you seen it—a cold today and something worse tomorrow.

That's the worst part about a "common cold." It's so easy to catch but hard to get rid of.

If you treat it carefully—try to fight it off without taking the necessary precautions to drive it right out of your system, it can be you're in for trouble.

Statistics prove that the average person loses ten days a week a year on account of colds. That is a pretty heavy tax to pay for colds.



Something to Watch

If there's anything you want to watch, it's the "common cold." Health authorities on every side urge it.

Don't take any cold lightly. Don't try to fight it off. You may be only a sneeze or a sniffle today but a bad case tomorrow. Regard a cold seriously. Treat it for what it is—a cold.

As an internal infection, it is quite apparent that a cold requires internal treatment. To get at the real trouble, you must get at a cold from within with a treatment that attacks the cold at its source.

An excellent thing to take for a cold is Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine.

Fourfold Effect

First of all, Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine is expressly a cold tablet. It has only one purpose—the treatment of colds. Working internally it gets at a cold in the right way, from the inside.

It goes the four definite things of vital importance in the relief of a cold:

(1) It opens the bowels, an absolutely advisable step in the treatment of a cold.

(2) It checks the fever in the system.

(3) It relieves the headache and fever.

(4) It tones the system and helps hasten the further attack.

A fourfold treatment, no other word describes Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine's definite and speedy results.

For more than forty years it has been the stand-by of thousands in the treatment of colds and is today the largest selling cold tablet in the world.

Don't Delay — Don't Compromise!

When you feel a cold coming on, do something about it right away. Don't delay, don't compromise. Go right to your druggist and get a package of Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine.

Start taking the tablets immediately, you at a time. Usually, if taken promptly, Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine will check a cold in 24 hours—and that's the action you want.

All drug stores sell Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine. When you ask for it, insist upon getting what you ask for. Imitations cost you may save you a lot of anxiety.

PRESENTATION

A very pleasant afternoon was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Golden when the "Willing Workers" Sunday School class gathered to honour their daughter, Miss Jean Gay Cora Golden Golden. The early part of the afternoon was spent in games. At four o'clock Miss Rhea Bonisteel read the following address and Miss Phyllis Bonisteel presented Mrs. Gow with a beautiful casserole.

Dear Golda,
We have gathered together, one and all,
To bring you our wishes true,
For a long life of happiness,
With sorrow very few.

We hope you'll live in wedded bliss,
And have lots of money, remember, a kind word
Will drive away all fears.

Golda, we know will be faithful and good,
A help meet in every way,
And remember, Golda, wholesome food,
Often helps to save the day.

Just bear in mind our timely hints,
They are tested, tried and true,
And we know you will not forget them
For the interest we took in you.

We will come back from time to time
To see you in your home,
To eat a bite, and stay a while
Perhaps to chatter some.

And now, we'll end our little address,
Hoping,
With wishes all sincere
We hope you'll like our present
And can use it with good cheer.

Signed on behalf of your Sunday School Class — Phyllis Hall, Helen Carleton, Kay Hamilton.

Mrs. Gow thanked the class with a few well chosen words, after which a dainty lunch was served by the girls.

Mr. and Mrs. Robb In New York City

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Havelock Robb were recent guests at a gathering in the New York home of Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Chapin, noted collectors of old masters in oils. Mrs. Robb granted a request that he relate the story of his courtship, and the most exciting, in fact each, he received gift tickets to the Carnegie Hall concert in Vernon Jarvis' honour for himself and Mrs. Robb.

Among the guests on Sunday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Havelock Robb were among those who occupied boxes in the Metropolitan Grand Opera, the box in the latter being arranged from that of J. Pierpont Morgan. Ruth Slenczynski, the eleven-year-old pianist, performed in the manner with weird mastery which is too much for words. It would seem as when it is happening before one's eyes. However, in relief to the classical numbery and one of the little girl when playing, her mischief relief is changing to that the orchestral director, shook hands with the leading violin and others, delayed encores in the usual conventional manner, then settled down to whatever the horse how a piano can be made to deliver sound and rhythm and soul when under her spell! It was remarkable, indeed.

Mr. Wallace H. Robb Sends Message To His Majesty

KING FINDS TIME FOR ROUTINE WORK

Attends at Buckingham Palace to Sign Documents

London, Jan. 24—(CP-Havas)—Amid the ordeal of his father's passing and his own accession to the throne, King Edward VIII is already finding time for those routine duties which are so large in the life of the modern sovereign.

Early today he left the Palace of St. James' for Buckingham Palace, where a suite of offices is reserved for his use.

Attended at his desk by one private secretary, King Edward swiftly reviewed a number of documents, official and otherwise, calling for his signature. They were all signed and dispatched before the King resumed the duties connected with his father's obsequies.

Queue Forms More Than Mile Long

London, Jan. 24 (AP)—A queue more than a mile long swelled outside Westminster Hall this morning as the first of the ranks, four abreast, marched into the hall and past the coffin where the late King lies.

Seven women, among the first to enter, collapsed and were treated at a nearby first aid after passing through the hall.

Verse of Recessional Omitted at Service

LONDON, Jan. 24.—(AP)—Only four of the five verses of Rudyard Kipling's "Recessional" were sung at his funeral Tuesday in Westminster Abbey. The verse beginning "If drunk with sight of power we loose" was omitted.

Writing in the Daily Herald under the headline "Kipling Edited at His Funeral," Hannen Swaffer, a leading literary critic, commented:

"When they sang the 'Recessional' at the funeral of Bonar Law (Canadian-born prime minister who died in 1923), I pointed out that a light it was to alter conditions to sing those words in the presence of representatives from other lands.

"I stood amid the ambassadors of the nations, who were referred to as 'lesser breeds'."

The text of the verse omitted at Kipling's funeral follows:—

"If drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe,
Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the law—
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!"

Directive Operations Given Bulk of Credit

Toronto, Jan. 24.—(CP)—To the "directive operations" of the Ontario Government's Municipal Debenture Branch, Hon. Dr. Hall, Minister of Municipal affairs, gives the bulk of the credit for all the aid supported municipalities withdefaulted on debenture interest between the end of 1932 and payment for the first time.

Of the 30 municipalities the payments this year will be the first since they defaulted. Last year 14 of them resumed payments.

The "directive operations" which made interest payments possible were described by the Minister as bringing economies, increases in efficiency and greater tax collections.

Ability to "pay is the basis for the resumption of payments," and Mr. Croll predicted the move would "go far towards restoring the investing public's confidence in these municipalities."

Late King Loved in Canada Says Veteran

LONDON, Jan. 24—(CP-Havas) A large part of the crowd at Westminster Hall this morning especially youths and girl office workers, had stood in the cold wind and rain all night in order to view the late King's lying-in-state and get to their work on time.

Canadians and other overseas citizens of the British Commonwealth of Nations were among the first to enter the hall. Which is the body of the King lay on a black catafalque.

The feeling of these overseas subjects of the dead monarch were expressed by a gray-haired Canadian who joined the army at the outbreak of the Great War.

"One of the reasons why I felt I should like to be one of the first to pay homage to the King," he said, "is that I knew something at first hand of how he was loved overseas.

"And then I'm not afraid to wait eight hours, in the cold as I've stood before now in Canada, and worked there at all hours of the night."

Protests Innocence Before Being Executed

Raleigh, N.C., Jan. 24.—(AP)—A stocky young negro protested his innocence today before walking into North Carolina's new lethal gas execution chamber to become its first human victim.

The youth, Allen Foster, 20, was convicted of criminally attacking a white woman a few months ago.

Aware that his death was scheduled before noon today, Foster insisted "there ain't no use of my talking to a preacher. I can tell the Lord I ain't guilty as good as I can tell it to a preacher."

Within the chamber, with its hydro-cyanic gas, provides a painless death was doubted today by Warden H. H. Honeycutt. Two dogs which were killed in it during a test bit out loud yelps before they died. Medical authorities, however, said the dogs barked from fright.

AMERICAN FALLS DAMMED BY ICE

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Jan. 24. —(CP)—The great cataract of Niagara Falls is completely dammed by ice on the Canadian side of the gorge and no water is going over. The river from a point not far from the foot of the Horse Shoe Falls is a mass of solid ice extending below the lower bridge and into the rapids. There is another jam extending from the whirlpool almost to Lake Ontario.

Rivermen say there may be damage to the Canada Steamship Lines dock at Queenston, but the ice crush continues. The lower river is blocked with ice which is constantly piling up.

Gibraltar, Jan. 24 (CP-Havas)—The battleships Rodney and Nelson and the cruisers Leander, Calno and Sydney arrived here today on their Atlantic spring cruise. The sloop Scarborough will leave tomorrow for Portsmouth, en route to the West Indies.

TORONTO INDUSTRIALS

Toronto, Jan. 24 (CP)—The market for industrial shares, led by Nickel, and Industrial Acceptance, resumed up on the broad expansion of the Toronto stock exchange today and the two former issues were high levels. Brazilian opened at 12 and Nickel at 42-3/4. Over the whole board a strong note ruled with trading heavy.

Brazilian rose to 13 involved a gain for the day of 1 1-4 while Nickel was up 1 3-4. Other liquor issues were generally higher. C.P.R. and Smelters were steady to strong. The latter adding 1 point.

Oil shares were a bit heavy, International Petroleum and British American showing on the down side at early afternoon. Ford A was barely firm.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Jan. 24 (AP)—Brazilian price movements dominated today's stock market proceedings.

The aircrafts, some of the mines and pipelines, and Coca-Cola demanded while the utilities, steels, rails and motors generally circulated in a small fractional range.

Douglas Aircraft jumped around 3 points in a new high and Boeing, Sperry, United and Curtiss-Wright "A" improved. The mining group backed up somewhat in the afternoon, but Homestake, International Nickel, U.S. Smelting, Howe Sound, Cerro de Pasco and others held gains up to a point or so. Alaska Juneau and Myers "B" dropped more than 2 points and Goldfield more than one off.

The late tone was fairly steady. Transfers approximated 2,700,000 shares.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Jan. 24—(CP)—Following a second-hour dip, the gold stocks steadied and then moved up generally in the mining section of the Toronto Stock Exchange today. During periods the New York trend was a factor in the strength of the local list, Hollinger touching a point to 49 1-3 and Dome, Hollinger, Wright Hargreaves and Pioneer all sold higher.

Rumors that Washington was contemplating another devaluation of the dollar persisted and appeared to be a factor in the firmness of shares. Silver stocks were strong in the first hour but slipped backward in the early afternoon while Base Metal issues remained comparatively quiet. Golds were higher while other issues of the group were unchanged.

STRONG POSITION OF LONDON LIFE

The annual report of the London Life Insurance Company, published, explodes the theory that a business which suffered little from the depression will necessarily be slow to benefit from the upswing now being experienced by business in general. The entire life insurance business weathered the past six years in remarkable manner, and the progress made by the London Life during that period is worthy of special mention. The report for 1935, which is presented by Mr. Edward N. Reid, Managing Director, indicates that London Life traditions were strongly maintained last year, gratifying results having been registered in every particular which is essential to the Company's security and progress.

The total amount of insurance in force at the end of the year was $317,006,945 on a net basis. The new business written during the year, $41,-411,222 exclusive of annuities or business reinsured.

The total assets for the protection of policyholders and shareholders show increase for the year of $8,113,178 and the Company passed the hundred million mark ($100,340,616). Recognizing the necessity of increased vigilance concerning the security of all holdings during a period of gradually decreasing interest rates, a principle of vital importance in the administration of policyholders' funds entrusted to the London Life has continued its rigid pruning of investments which do not make up to agreement and policy reserves. During 1933 and 1934 large sums which fell due interest were written off, the effect of which action was apparent in the profit and loss account. These deductions were required to keep the investment holdings on a conservative action. Likewise, to provide the utmost security, policy reserves have been strengthened and have been increased substantially until they are now $4,000,000 more than the law actually required. In addition, the free surplus, which is available against any unforeseen contingencies, increased ten per cent and is now $4,-000,000.

The assets of the Company are invested in carefully selected and widely diversified securities which are subject to constant and expert scrutiny. The largest group are debentures, chiefly government and municipal, which make up 54 per cent of the total. The mortgage investments are all on improved real estate and total 44 per cent of the assets. Policy loans and liens are 1.6 per cent, and the balance, 0.4 per cent, is real estate including the Company's home office building, miscellaneous items make up the balance of 8 per cent. On a net basis the rate of interest earned on the invested assets was 5.43 per cent.

The London Life maintains Ordinary and Industrial offices in Belleville under the direction respectively of District Manager D. O. Walker, C.L.U., and Superintendent H. A. Smith. The fine record of operations contributed very substantially to the Company's excellent record for the year.

Board Room Gossip

RED LAKE GOLD SHORE

This stock has been active and strong for several weeks on reports of very good ore results followed by an announcement this week that the management had authorized the purchase and installation of a 125-ton mill, with provision for space for future expansion. Considerable work has been done on the property in the Red Lake district, and encouraging results have been encountered on the various levels. From work done to date veins appear to be strong in width and valuable from $19.50 to $31.80 per ton. The mine manager estimates ore assured ore at 45,150 tons, averaging $20.39 per ton, with a possible ore at 70,000 tons. There seems to be favorable assurance that much larger tonnages will be developed as lateral work proceeds on the present levels, and as work is carried to greater depth.

MANITORA ARD EASTERN

Operating in the Cobalt-Gowganda area of Ontario, the company has let a diamond drilling contract to Smith and Travers. An extensive program is planned, to test in particular a highly interesting section to the northwest of former workings. On claims optioned by the company, a new vein, striking northeast, has been uncovered in a series of test pits and trenches.

Talk of inflation is again being heard on all sides. The fall of the French Government is taken to indicate a revaluation of the franc which should, in turn, lead to world currency stabilization. Inflation in the United States is forecast by the present Roosevelt Government, faced with a huge deficit as well as the necessity of finding funds for payment of the bonus bill, may decide to inflate the currency. One of the simplest ways this can be accomplished is by increasing the value of gold by the full limit allowing the President.

In other words, President Roosevelt, by raising the value of the yellow metal to $41.34 an ounce, or 100 per cent. over the old price of $20.67, would automatically increase the country's gold holdings by close to $1,500,000,000 and thus alleviate conditions. Such a step is considered quite extent. In view of the above, it is not at all surprising that the gold stocks have been strong and active features of late.

One of the best inflation hedges is International Nickel. Reports of the company in the final quarter of 1934 are believed the highest in the company's history, being slightly in excess of the $1,742,582 or 50 cents a share on common reported for the three months ended September 30, previously the best record.

As a result of the Fourth quarter showing, Nickel's 1935 earnings should also be in excess of previous operations, approximately $25,833,000 or $1.94 a share on the 14,504,328 common shares outstanding. The previous four high was reached in 1929, when the company reported net earnings of $23,956,997. For the year ended December 31, 1934, Nickel reported net earnings of $18,447,479, or $1.13 a common share, and $9,962,-56 or 68 cents a share in 1933.

A study of the holdings of ten American investment trusts indicates that the motors are the favorites, General Motors appearing in the portfolio of all ten, while Chrysler was held by eight of the trusts. It is interesting to point out that International Nickel was held by seven trusts and International Nickel by four.

MONTREAL POWER

Because of the substantial interest in this Province, a considerable amount of selling of Montreal Power has appeared over the last few months. Because of its affiliation with Beauharnois, a number of investors have become frightened and have sold their shares. This company has been in business for many years now and there seems to be no good reason for it not continuing to progress simultaneously with the growth in the City of Montreal in the future. Before long we may all look back and wonder why this highly seasoned stock sold for so long a period on a basis to yield 6 per cent.

NORANDA

Noranda has attained a record high rank in production. Ore reserves are estimated at not far short of 30,000,000 tons.

FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL

Falconbridge Nickel is growing steadily in magnitude. Unofficial estimates of the present 3,000,000 tons of ore indicated with a value of between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 in this second largest nickel mine in the world.

GRAIN

Winnipeg, Jan. 24 (CP)—Despite weakness at Liverpool, wheat prices were steady in dull, early trading on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange today. Near mid-session, values were unchanged to 3/8 cent lower. May at 88; July 88½; and October 87¼, cents.

Reflecting the sharp advance in Exchange Markets, Liverpool was 1½d lower and, in consequence, other outside markets also were weak.
